MASSAGE FOR BLACK EYES.

Better Than Paint and Bees for Obliterating Evidence of Fistic Encounters.
Those who make a business of obliterating evidence of fistic encounters in the shape of black eyes by painting the damaged optics no longer enjoy a monopoly of such business. This I was told by a pugilistic acquaintance whose experience entitles him to be regarded as an authority on the subject.

"Massage treatment of the region affected," he said, "will beat paint and raw beefsteak all hollow. But it should be applied immediately after the injury is received in order to prove thoroughly effective. It does not require an expert to do it. All that is necessary is to move the fingers rapidly and keep up the brained surface and to keep it up until the last vestige of discoloration has disappeared. The explanation is easy.
Where the blow has been received the blood becomes congested. It is the clot of blood showing through the transparent skin that produces the black effect.
The pressure of the fingers gradually loosens the clot, and the blood is forced out into the general currents of circulation, and fresh and properly colored blood takes its place."

However, as a rule, the professional "pug" does not bother himself about accelerating the disappearance of a black eye. It is a sign which proclaims the fact that its proprietor has recently enjoyed an engagement, and as such he is an object of envy to his less fortunate brethren. It is the man about town, whose overindulgence occasionally causes him to forget that discretion is the better part of valor, who is apt to profit most by the knowledge that message, promptly applied, will remove the signs of mauling from an eye that has been in violent contact with some other fellow's fist, and thus obviate the necessity of inventing a story to account for it, which, however ingenious, will be sneered at by skeptical and incredulous acquaintances, some of whom may have "been there themselves."—New York

WANTS TO BE A SLAVE.

A Young Married Woman Who Refuses to Be Emancipated.

Very often when a young married woman starts housekeeping she is favored with a circular from the Women's Emancipation league as well as with various more or less tasty literature dealing with "sexual" matters from an advanced point of view. The Emanci-pators address her in this strain:

"Recognizing that the slavery of sex is the root of all slavery, and that injustice to womanhood, especially injustice within the family, is the perpetual source of all other injustice, it (the "league") seeks the legal, political, social and industrial emancipation of women, as the vital and indispensable condition of all other true lasting reforms, and affirms these claims as paramount to all personal, sectional or party consideration whatever."

I have a deep rooted aversion to slavery in all shapes. There are women slaves among us, as there are men slaves.
When I find a woman slave, I shall be happy to assist in emancipating her.
But this does not prevent my sympathizing with the writer of the following letter:

"Sir—I am a married woman—I think I may say girl—of three months' standing, just entered with joy and hopefulness upon what I have been taught to believe the highest and noblest duties of woman. It may be that my belief and my hopes are delusions; that I am no better than a slave, and that if I submit to the injustice in store for me I shall become a party to all the other wrongs in the world. But it is kind to me this just now! Mightn't I be left to find out my mistake for myself?
When I do, won't it be time enough to join the Emancipation league? I think it would, so I am trying to keep my delusion and my annual subscription until I have seen how my lord and master treats his unfortunate slave."—Lon-

Centennial of the National Capital.

When the year 1900 arrives, it will be in order to celebrate the centennial of the establishment here of the national capital. The celebration should not be a small affair, nor ought it to be a mere fashionable show—a day of processions, bands, banquets and oratory. It should be an exposition of what this nation has done in the hundred years since its seat of government was taken possession of by the few officials who then directed affairs. The exposition of 1900 should be compact and select. Preliminary examinations by competent experts should determine the worthiness of proposed exhibits, and only the best ought to be given space. An international exposition at that time would conflict with more than one European endeavor in the same line, but aside from that rather important consideration it would undoubtedly be better to make the affair national rather than international.—Washington Star.

Brussels Doctors Combine.

The physicians of Brussels have banded themselves into a union, pledged to resist any attempt to cheapen their scale of remuneration, and have bound themselves not to accept any fee below a certain fixed sum. They have been led to take this course by a circular addressed to them by several industrial unions informing them that physicians who would give medical attendance at the rate of 80 cents a visit would be exclusively called in by sick members of the trades unions.—Brussels Letter.

The Triumph of the Machine Guns.

The interesting account of the fighting in Matabeleland which Captains White and Donovan have given is, in effect, a glorification of the machine guns.
It was all due to the maxims, and the hotchkiss guns completed the rout in every instance. So long as the English troops took ordinary precautions there was no possibility of disaster. The laagers were a sheet of flame. It was no use trying to advance. Seven thousand warriors hurled themselves upon the guns in vain. They were not "mowed down," says Captain White, but "lay pretty thick." Well, we will not quarrel over a phrase. The fact remains that between 1,500 and 2,000 natives were killed.—Pall Mall Gazette.

HER WORLD.

Behind them slowly sank the western world.
Before them new horizons opened wide.
"Yonder," he said, "old Rome and Venice wait.
And lovely Florence by the Arno's side." She heard, but backward all her heart had glided.

Where the young moon sailed through the sunset red.
"Yonder," he thought, "with breathing soft and deep,
My little lad lies smiling in his sleep."
They sailed where Capri dreamed upon the sea And Naples slept beneath her olive trees.
They saw the plains where trod the gods of old, Pink with the flush of wild anemones.
They saw the marble by the master wrought To shrine the heavenly beauty of his thought.
Still ran one longing through her smiles and sighs—
"If I could see my little lad's sweet eyes!"
Down from her shrine the dear Madonna gazed, Her baby lying warm against her breast.
"What does she see?" he whispered. "Can she guess?"

The cruel thorns to those soft temples grew red.

"Ah, no," she said. "She shuts him safe from harm."

Within the love locked harbor of her arms.
No fear of coming fate could make me sad If so tonight I held my little lad.

"If you could choose," he said, "a royal boon Like that girl dancing yonder for the king, What gift from all her kingdom would you bid Obedience bring to her hand to bring?"

The dancer's robe, the glittering banquet hall, Swam in the mist of tears along the wall.

"No power," she said, "nor riches nor delight, But just to hold my little lad tonight."

XANTIPPE.

Daphne stepped lightly out over the threshold of her door. The sun was shining with an intolerable glare on the white marble walls of the houses around and on the white line dust of the pavement, causing Daphne's bright, laughing eyes to wink and blink involuntarily. She drew a thin, gauzy veil over her head and face and slipped, keeping carefully within the sparse shadow cast by the walls of the houses, to a dwelling near by. Raising a heavy curtain hanging before the entrance door, she tripped softly inside. The room, however, was quite empty. It was a small, square room, the walls colored dark red; its only furniture a tripod, on which were burning dimly two chased silver lamps.

"She will be in the gynaeceion," said Daphne to herself softly, and raising another curtain, which hung exactly opposite, she passed through into a second room. There, under a portico which led out into a courtyard, upon a circular marble bench, sat the one whom she was seeking—a young and beautiful woman. A long white garment, with a border embroidered in crimson, lay in heavy, graceful folds about her small outstretched feet; an upper garment (the chiton) of the same color as the robe was gathered closely up about her neck, but left her slender arms quite bare, one of which rested languidly upon the carved back of the seat. The woman's small head was bound with three narrow scarlet silken fillets, her way hair caught up in a loose knot at the back of her neck. Hearing the curtain rustle, she turned her head and smiled as her dark eyes caught sight of Daphne's smiling face peeping from among its folds. Kissing her hand, she pointed toward the court and shook her head as a warning to the newcomer not to speak too loud. In the court, regardless of the sun's hot rays, by the side of a fountain—a lion's head, from whose open mouth a slender stream of water fell into a shallow basin—two men were seated in earnest conversation.

Daphne glided noiselessly up to her friend's side, and seating herself upon the ground laid her head upon the other's knee. She sat there some moments in silence, endeavoring to catch what it was the men were discussing.
In vain. She could hear only the sound of their voices. That of the principal speaker—a dark, swarthy man, of middle age, with a flat nose and thick, protruding lips—was sonorous and mellow; his companion's, high pitched and speaking. After a few minutes' silence, Daphne whispered:

"How ugly he is—thy Socrates!"
"But so learned, so wise, so great," murmured the one in answer, but she sighed as she spoke.

"Thou sighest. Hast wearied on the first day of thy wedded life with the philosopher?" inquired Daphne, with a bright, sidelong glance.

"No," answered Xantippe proudly.
"Is he not the most learned, the wisest man in all Athens? And I am happy to think he considered me worthy to be his wife. Thou shouldst have heard the speech with which he welcomed me to his roof yesterday. Among other things he told me that there were evil demons who lurked in corners and cupboards to tempt young wives to be neglectful of their duties. But there was also a deity who, living under our roof, would take me under his protection, guard me from evil and help me to resist temptation, whom I must propitiate by humility and wifely obedience. But how can I do this when Socrates himself prevents me?"

"Socrates—prevent thee! Speak, and tell me how this can be. Thou knowest I was wedded against my will to Anti-sthenes, preferring Glaucon, to whom my parents refused me. Should I learn from thee, however, that the wife of a philosopher has reason to complain of her lot, I shall no longer reproach my parents in my heart for bestowing me on the merchant and denying me to the scholar."

"Thou knowest," answered Xantippe, "that it is my duty to see that my lord's table is well supplied with suitable food. But how can I do this when he gives me no money? Three times I went this morning to him, asking him gently, 'Give me, I pray thee, a tetrabolon, that I may buy fish and vegetables for the midday meal.' Twice he gave me no answer; the third he spoke not to me, but to Euclid, who arrived this morning from Megara. 'Euclid, why does this woman trouble us and disturb us at our discourse?'"

Before Daphne could open her mouth to speak the words of sympathy trembling on her lips, Socrates, leaving his seat at the fountain, approached, followed by his friend.

"According to the sun, it should be midday, my Xantippe. I am hungry.
If the midday meal is prepared, we will partake of it. Euclid, too, will bear us company."

Daphne smiled maliciously at the thought that the philosopher and his pupil were likely this day at least to go hungry.

Xantippe, however, blushed with shame. Standing from her seat trembling, and standing with downcast head before her husband in faltering tones explained why the midday meal was

NOT PREPARED.

She had asked him hours ago for money to buy food, but he had given her none.

Euclid laughed jeeringly at her words, but Socrates replied mildly:
"Justice is one of the chiefest virtues belonging to man. As I gave thee no money at thy request, the fault is mine.
The next time, however, my Xantippe, when I do not heed thy words, raise thy voice and continue speaking until thou succeedest in attracting my attention.
Let the evening meal, therefore, be prepared as usual, and let us, as of old, fetch us a vessel of wine, that we may continue our discourse with minds and bodies refreshed."

Xantippe's beautiful face cleared up at Socrates' quiet words. "Thou seest," she whispered when she and Daphne were alone together again, "how kind and just he is."

And she kept her husband's advice, to raise her voice while speaking to him, firmly in her memory.

The next day, therefore, when Socrates turned a deaf ear to her request for money—he being at that time in earnest conversation with Daphne's husband, Antisthenes—she raised her voice, as she had been bidden by him, and he still continued oblivious to her request she screamed, in a voice so shrill and loud that she herself was startled at the sound of it, "Socrates, give me some money!"

The philosopher, disturbed and anxious to continue his discourse with his friend, promptly complied with her demand.

In a very few days, however, Socrates' ears became accustomed to his wife's tones, shrill as they had grown, and Xantippe, on her part, found it impossible—accustomed as she was by this time to the high key necessary to make herself audible to her husband—to lower her voice when speaking to others.

Daphne therefore remarked complaiingly to Xantippe's friends and her own: "Xantippe's voice grows harsher and shriller every day. Not content with screaming at her philosopher, she begins now to scream at us."

Xantippe soon found it necessary to ask Socrates for money to buy new garments. When she succeeded at last in making her husband understand what it was she required, he shook his head doubtfully and answered:

"In my eyes, my Xantippe, thou art beautiful and lovely in thy present garments—old and shabby though they be.
Beware of vanity, which is also a demon."

Xantippe, however, was not satisfied with this judgment of her husband, philosopher though he was, concerning the garment she was wearing. Daphne, too, assured her that the robe was not fit to be worn.

When, therefore, Xantippe for a second time, with tears and shrill upbraidings, insisted on Socrates complying with her desire, the philosopher, to be rid of her, gave her three times as much money as she had asked for. And Xantippe, overjoyed, was able to buy for herself, besides the coveted garments, a fillet of gold for her hair, and an arm-let in the shape of a serpent, of an Egyptian who sold jewelry in the bazaar.

From that day Xantippe's voice grew louder and louder, until her husband grew to shudder at the very sound of it.
And not only Daphne, but soon all Athens—old Greece—all the world—proclaimed Xantippe a scold—and a shrew who, by her complaints and upbraidings, made the life of her philosopher husband a burden to him.

HEALTH LEGISLATION.

An Interesting Call Issued by a Joint Committee of Three Societies.

At a meeting of the Brooklyn Public Health society at the residence of W. E.
Uptegrove the other night a paper was read by J. Winfield Scott, secretary of the National Constitutional Liberty league of Boston, on "Methods of Protecting and Promoting Public Health." The following call was issued by a joint committee of the league, the Brooklyn Public Health society and the New York Public Health and Constitutional Liberty league from their headquarters, room 18, 331 Madison avenue, New York:

Whereas, It is self evident that constitutional liberty, scientific progress in the healing art, will be promoted and public health conserved by immediate legislation requiring 1. Physicians to write prescriptions legibly and when possible in English and Latin if they choose; 2. That medicines dispensed by physicians and others containing poisonous ingredients shall be by them legibly labeled "Caution: Poisonous when used as directed." 3. Restoring to every citizen the right to freely contract for the treatment of his disease, and to the free choice of his physician, and to the free choice of his place of residence, and to the free choice of his place of employment, and to the free choice of
