

CHEAP HORSES.

Dan De Quille, in a letter to the Salt Lake Tribune, says a band of 100 horses sold in Nevada a short time ago for 13 cents each. The horse is surely going out of date, out of style or out of usefulness, or all combined. However we look at it, the horse is not worth near so much in dollars and cents, as his faithful services are daily lessening. In Idaho the commonest kind of cayuses have not yet dropped to anything near the Nevada price, but the tendency is downward, and in due course of time 20 or 25 cents will be considered a pretty good price for a good, gentle, tough, young cayuse, if duly warranted not to buck or kick, and is found to be without a physical blemish. But if not perfect so far as equine perfection goes, both physically and morally, and cannot exhibit by his mouth and teeth, indications that he has not parted with his usefulness, will be declared at a discount and he will readily sell for somewhere about 10 cents more than nothing.

CRANES IN UNION COUNTY.

Cranes are so numerous in Union county that there are not enough men, women and children to keep them off the grain fields and gardens. In many places they have destroyed large orchards and groves eating off the leaves and limbs, leaving only the trunks and trees standing. Part of the day these birds swarm to the streams like countless herds of cattle and so great is their number that they often drink the streams entirely dry, thus threatening the country with a general drouth. What seems the strangest part of the matter is that the skins of the cranes are so tough that they cannot be penetrated by a ball from a 44 calibre rifle. The cranes have practically taken the country and the people are fleeing for their lives. And geographers have already changed the name from Union to Crane county.

F. H. Cooper, of Siegel, Cooper & Co., the great Chicago dry goods firm, gives these sensible reasons for favoring the free coinage of silver: "First, because there is not enough gold in the world to transact the world's business. The result is that a syndicate of bankers is enabled to corner the gold, and when our treasury is nearly depleted we have to sell bonds to these banks to get the gold back again. Did not this happen twice last year, and did not the syndicate clear $15,000,000 or $16,000,000 on the deals? They might corner the gold once a month, and before long would own this country, body and soul. Second we have untold treasures in silver buried in the mines of Colorado and other states. Shall we let it lie there? Suppose we mine $100,000,000. Is it not more useful in the pockets of the people than buried in the bosom of the earth? Bimetallism, say I, with Europe if we can, without her if we can't."

The police authorities in Pendleton recently arrested three men as vags, who, after being kept in jail over night and brought to trial before the recorder, declared they were acrobats on their way to Spokane to fill an engagement. The recorder had a space in the room cleared and after enjoying for an hour some of the finest tumbling ever produced on the circus boards, concluded the claim of the men was established and let them go their way rejoicing.

Corvallis Times: Those accustomed to wet their whistles on Sunday went thirsty yesterday. All the saloons in town had previous notice served on them by the sheriff, and promptly at 12 o'clock Saturday night closed their doors and kept them closed until this morning. It was the first Sunday closing that has been observed in Corvallis since Prosecuting Attorney Condon used to visit the town, and was the subject of general discussion during the day.

The Fourth of July comes but once a year and the patriotic citizen never fails to enthuse. Few however think of the doubt and darkness that hovered over the patriots assembled in Independence hall that memorable first Fourth of July day. Their signing of the Declaration of Independence was liable to cost them their heads.

The First Boat to Eugene.

The following interesting account is told by a Portland paper of the first steamboat trip ever made to Eugene, one that seems to have been made almost as easily as those made nowadays. When several more surveys are made this city will probably have the benefit of steamboat competition. But here is the article:

"It was a long time before a steamer ever got up as far as Eugene," said some one. "I remember when the first arrived late in the spring of '57. I think it was Colonel Joe Feal had here freighted with a big lot of merchandise, and when she reached Eugene it was a great day there, I tell you."

"Yes," said Colonel Joe, "I was handling a good deal of merchandise in those days at Eugene. It was a great disturbing point then, for provisions and all kinds of articles, but Corvallis had always been the nearest steamer port. They called it Marysville then. I used to send ox teams there for my freight, sometimes coming clear to Canemah and even to Portland with those ox teams. The stern wheeler James Clinton used to run between Canemah and Corvallis, but up to 1857 no steamer had ever come up to Eugene. Well, that spring I had a pretty big consignment of merchandise from San Francisco, and I freighted the James Clinton at Canemah. I says to Captain Cochrane, who was her captain, 'now, I am going to haul all this stuff from Corvallis to Eugene. I want you to take it right up to Eugene.'"

"Well," says he, "I'll tell you how it is: There's a certain stump low down on the bank up by Corvallis, and if that stump is sticking out of water, 'tain't no use for us to try to get up to Eugene; but if she's under, I'll risk it."

"When we got to Corvallis we found that stump just 22 inches under water, and so the word was 'Eugene or bust.' By the time we started everybody at Eugene and surrounding country had heard that the steamer was coming, and there was great excitement up the valley ahead of us. We went along all right until we got into Price's slough, and here things began to get mighty ticklish. Lem White and Bass Miller were the pilots, and they got nervous and so did Captain Cochrane. Finally an old cow spluttered and drowned across the slough just ahead of us and disappeared over the further bank with a snort and we came to a dead stop."

"We've got to back down out of the slough some way," says Captain Cochrane. "That's what we have," says the pilot. "But I went into the pilot house and talked the thing over with them. The result was that I signed a paper agreeing to pay one-third of the value of the James Clinton (she cost $27,000) in case she went to the devil; so with a little toot of the whistle we went ahead. We reached Eugene without mishap, and found both banks there just packed with people. They were on horseback, on muleback, on foot, by ox team and by every possible means of conveyance, and they just turned themselves loose yelling and cheering and the James Clinton whistled out most all the steam she had left in her boilers. There was a whole lot of people there who had never seen a steamer before in their lives."

"The officers and crew came up by the pilot house, and I introduced each of them to the crowd, and there was a cheer at each introduction. There was Captain Cochrane, the two pilots, Lem White and Bass Miller; Boston was purser, the Springer was steward, and Jake Wortman was fireman. They were all good fellows. The fireman is now Jacob Wortman, the McMillanville banker."

"That was a great day at Eugene. The fun and revelry was carried far into the night. The citizens got up a grand ball, and topped it off with a splendid supper, and there's a lot of old-timers left up the valley today who will remember the day the first steamer came to Eugene."

Stockholders Meeting.

BEN BOLT AS A CHARMER.

Trilby's Author Anticipated by a Negro Trainer. The sudden popularity which the pretty ballad "Ben Bolt" regained, through its prominence in "Trilby," recalls an incident in which the same air played an equally prominent part. The story, as related by Superintendent W. P. Maxwell of Woodlands, cannot well be doubted, as the material facts are all corroborated in the archives of the turf.

The scene is laid at Morris park; date July 17, 1892. It is a brilliant hot day, according to the narrator, and three races had been already run, of which the favorites had won two and the second choice one, so that the talent were feeling at peace with all the world. Betting on the coming in on Ilona, who was quoted as 11 to 10, in a way to delight the hearts of the bookmakers. There were eight youngsters entered in the race, and despite the fact that Ilona was a maiden she was the tip, and the money poured in on her chances as though it was all over in the cashing in, Marcellus being the only one of the others that was thought to have even a fighting chance.

Just when speculation was at its height a great, gaunt, bony colored man came sauntering into the ring, apparently only bent on amusing himself. There was one thing queer about him, however. Whether he was a whitener or whether he showed his way he never ceased whistling softly a couple of bars from that old, old song: Oh, don't you remember sweet Alice, Ben Bolt. Sweet Alice, whose hair was so brown? How she wept with delight when you gave her a smile.

And trembled with fear at your frown. And as he whistled he thumped a greenback that was just $10 strong. Meantime on every second blackboard in the ring the following was inscribed: Straight. Place. 100 to 1 Sweet Alice, 90 (Keefer)... 30 to 1

Some of the bookmakers who made it a rule to be conservative offered 60 to 1 against the filly, but 60 to 100 to 1 were the odds offered over most of the ring, and so the darky wandered around whistling and fingering a $10 bill, and at the stand of every bookmaker who posted long odds against the outsider he would stop and the $10 would change hands. A thousand to ten, Sweet Alice, the bookies would drone in a monotone. Then the ticket would be handed out and placed in the long darky's pocket. Untrilingly he strolled around until the wad of tickets was as thick as a full deck of cards and their face figures called for $25,000. Then, with another lone greenback, he appeared at "Virginia" Carroll's stand.

"How much Sweet Alice folk to win, sah?" humbly inquired the darky. "A hundred to one, Sammy," replied the southern blood. "Gimme just $10 ob dat, sah, please." "A thousand to ten, Sweet Alice," sang out Carroll as he drew his sponge across the board.

"Look here, Sammy," said he, "how do you like this?" And he wrote 300 where 100 had stood before. "Like to have some more?" "Well, sah, I've just got 20. I doan' mine if I does play dat." And he handed up two more out of that inexhaustible bag of funds.

"Four thousand to 20, Sweet Alice," sang out Carroll, and the darky, taking his ticket, disappeared in the crowd. Two minutes after a shout went up, and the horses were off. A few moments later a groan ran through the crowd, for Hunt's Sweet Alice had won galloping by two lengths. Time, 46 1/2 for the half mile, just half a second short of Geraldine's record.

Then a commotion arose, and men rushed to the betting ring to see what on earth was the matter. Standing on a box in the center of the place, a long, gaunt darky was singing with a voice that shook the rafters. The song he sang was an old one and ran this way: Oh, don't you remember sweet Alice, Ben Bolt. Sweet Alice, whose hair was so brown? How she wept with delight when you gave her a smile.

And trembled with fear at your frown. "You'll weep with delight pretty soon, I guess," roared Virginia Carroll from his box near by. "No, sah, I've done weepin'," sang out the darky as he waved a bundle of tickets in the air. "No, sah, I've done weepin'." And then he commenced singing again, and every time he mentioned Sweet Alice he struck high C.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Making a New Kind of Gold.

The French chemists have discovered a new amalgam, of 94 parts copper and 6 parts antimony, which is declared to be a wonderful substitute for gold. When polished, it almost exactly resembles the auriferous metal and can be drawn, wrought and soldered precisely like gold. Besides it can be manufactured at a cost of only about a shilling for a pound of avoirdupois.

Petroleum.

Petroleum is found in Sicily, the north of Italy, in many volcanic isles in the Mediterranean, at Baku, on the Caspian; on the slopes of the Caucasus, at Rangoon, in Burma; in the island of Trinidad, in Ontario, Pennsylvania, Ohio, New York, West Virginia, California, in Siberia, Tartary, China and in several places in Africa.
