THE EXTRA SESSION JOB.

The Salem Journal is a keen observer of public events, and has this theory of the pressure brought to bear by the Portland ring for an extra legislative session:

"From all the evidence at home so far the old Portland machine crowd want a special session and Milwaukee to buy more books and want it bad. They have absolutely less beer. no political future unless they can get a chance to make some appearance of favoring retrenchment and reforms. They wrote a reform platform and pretended to give the people a new deal. They never cept a single pledge of the platform and prevented a new deal as far as possible. That is their record and they can not escape from it. The fight between the people in the republican party who were sincere in their were false to their pledges of a new deal is on just as hot as it was last winter.

The only way they can form an idea of this is to obtain a truthful statement of the number of people they reach by means of the paper. It goes without saying that an advertisement in a paper having 1,500 subscribers is three times as valuable as it would be in a paper having 500 subscribers. The character of a paper and the esteem in which it is held by the general public, and its readers, are also factors that enter into and determine to a great extent its value as an advertising medium. If the paper is a welcome and looked for visitor to the homes of the people, the friendly feeling extended to it is also centage the increase of population extended to those whose advertisements appear in its columns.
