ing that owing to the press of business matters he had not had time to prepare an extended address, but would attempt to deliver a short extemporaneous talk. He said he felt some timidity in going into the pulpit and trying to talk on orthodox subjects when a lot of preachers were sitting at his back, but he hoped that if he got outside of the lines some of them would call him down. He spoke for about 30 minutes, giving his opinion about 30 minutes, giving his opinion as to the duties of the church and the evangelical alliance in regard to moral and political matters. He thought that the church could not enter into political matters without lowering the standard of its high aim; but the evangelical alliance, while being com-posed of members from all churches, is a separate and independent organization from any church, having a different object to accomplish, and whose aim is, not to create election quarrels, but to enter into and so far as possible elevate and purify the moral tone of all civil and political questions, and to break down so far as possible wrongdoing at the polls.

Mr Bilyeu evidently would have been more at case, had he been ad-dressing judge and jury, but as it was, doubtless through force of habit, he could not help "admitting" and "sub-mitting" certain questions and points throughout his discourse. However, his address was to the point and quite interesting, and the audience would gladly have listened to him for 30 minutes longer had he been inclined to speak. At the close of his address he was enthusiastically applauded.

Dr Driver was then introduced. He had not previously been announced to speak and when his name was mentioned nearly everybody began to draw long breaths and search for the most comfortable places they could find in their seats. The reverend gentleman spoke for three-quarters of an hour, and it was half past nine o'clock before the audience was permitted to leave the building and stretch their cramped and weary limbs.

Dr Driver in his peculiar way des-cribed the duties of the church and of the evangelical alliance, relating a number of his comic annecdotes and to better illustrate and prove his asser-tions in every instance. Referring to the recent actions of Christian people in taking an active part in political matters, he went on to denounce the churches and to condemn their actions for entering into politics as a church organization. He was of the opinion that the only cure for the saloon ques-tion is to reform the men who patrontrate this argument story of drying up the cows.

At the close of Dr Driver's remarks,

Rev J A Longbottom, pastor of the Cumberland Presbyterian church, rose to his feet and asked to say a word. He said in substance: That he begged to disagree with Dr Driver in some of that gentleman's remarks. He denied the statement of the preceding speaker that any of the churches of this city had entered into politics, and said to the audience that, while he could not have the privilege of replying at that moment to some statements made by Dr Driver, he would certainly take occasion to do so at the first opportunity afforded. Mr Longbottom's face was pale with excite-ment and he seemed to be greatly exercised over the matter.

As soon as Mr Longbottom has taken his seat Dr Driver was on the floor and attempted to vindicate him-self in the remarks he had made. He
