Dufur, Oregon.

GENTLEMEN: On arriving home last week, I found all well and anxiously walting. Our little girl, eight am, one-half years old, who had wasted away to 38 pounds, is now well, strong and vigorous, and well fleshed up. S. B. Cough Cure has done its work well. Both of the children like it. Your S. B. Cough Cure has cured and kept away all hoarsness from me. So give it to every one, with greetings for all.

Wishing you prosperity, we are Yours, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. FORD. If you wish to feel fresh and cheerful, and ready for the Spring's work, cleanse the system with the Headache and Liver Cure, by taking two or three doses a week.

COMMENT UNNECESSARY.

Anent the many slurs cast at Wm J Bryan, The Dilles Chronicle, the leading republican paper of Eastern Oregon, in denouncing this attitude, especially of the press says: "The Portland Telegram, while usually fair, has disclosed a rabid streak that becomes visible in every mention of the name of W J Bryan. Yesterday evening in speaking of him and he rumor that he was to write a book on bimetal-ism, that paper said: 'He is the junior member of the enterprising fame-building firm of Mary Bryan and Husband.' The Chroniele does not believe of Mr Bryan's views, neither do the American people, not by 700,000 plurality, as the election basjustshown. But while differing from him in political ideas, there is no reason why either the press or the people should undertake to belittle the man. History will deal kindly with him, and he will always stand in the history of American politics one of its most remarkable figures. When he was nominated at Chicago, be was what might be called an unknown man. He was nominated by a party whose chances were estimated at the time as simply nothing. Its record on the tariff, the hard times, the sale of bonds, increasing of the public debt in time of peace, and, more than all, its advocacy of the silver standard, were each considered enough to beat it; and, collectively, to everlastingly annihilate it. Bryan accepted the nomination; he put himself at the head of a discouraged and a disheartened following. Single-hand-ed he commenced the fight; he put courage in hearts where before was despair; from a flying and defeated mob he organized solid and determined squadrons, and in a few brief months led them to battle. He was defeated, but he made a gallant fight.

"Admit his cause was wrong as we may, we cannot but admire the genius of the man. His speeches were models, and though made at the rate of from ten to thirty a day, he made no mistakes. He made the fight so hot that he called forth every effort of his opponents, and in spite of these and of the immense popular majority against him, he almost snatched victory from them.

"It is no use to belittle Bryan. He was a foeman worthy of our steel, and a true American. He accepted defeat manfully, and as we have said before, will go down in the history of political parties as one of its brightest characters."

The Coban question he evinces little interest, handling it as though he had rather pass it by. CONCERNING SHOP.

A DOMESTIC DIALOGUE ON AN IN-TERESTING TOPIC.

Kate and John Have a Friendly Discussion About Life, Its Aims and Its Follies, With Something About Cranks and Sentimentalists.

"Now, if it wasn't for that dreadful hag Necessity, driving a fellow and pinching the very life out of one's ideals, we might live on a higher plane, among books, art and all that sort of thing, you know,

"But if it wasn't for the shop the life would be pinched out of the real, and we might reach that higher plane before we were prepared for it," answered the prac-

"Constant wrestling with the bread and butter question does not always develop the best that is in us and prepare us to understand the upper side of things," said

"They say it takes the dark closet to develop the picture, and most great men have come up out of poverty. But don't waste time crying for the moon, my dear. There is the shop to mind," replied Kate. "Most great men have cried for the moon. A man's success or failure depends upon whether he is true or false to his ideals. There was one Newton, you have heard of. He cried for the moon, and what's more, he got it, with the sun and stars thrown in.

The great thing is to get it," answered

Yes," assented the husband. "The crying goes for nothing. Efforts don't count in the world, though they do count in a man's character. My little wife, like the rest of mankind, appreciates success. Now, suppose a man hasn't enough genius to discover laws or paint pictures or make poems, but just enough to"—

"Make him discontented," interrupted
Kate. "I have heard somewhere that the highest gift is the gift of using. If one is just a bundle of artistic material, that he omehow cannot get at, to make up into pictures or poems or things that well, he is simply unfortunate, and the world calls him a crank."

Then the little woman, who feared she was getting personal, went up to her hus-band caressingly, as was her wont. "Never mind, John; I like cranks. They are not commonplace people, and you are the erank I turn."

"Would you turn me into a money mak-ing machine, with my few good spots cov-ered over with dollars?" But he added: "We don't hear of cranks on that side. However warped a business man may be come, he may coin his very soul into money, and his name assumes an impor-tance corresponding to the gold he repre-sents. People don't see what he has lost in getting it. Gaining the whole world and losing his own soul," quoted the wife.

"I heard," said John, "of an idiot boy in London who was always seen playing a top day after day in the same spot. Some-times he went home in a sort of exhilaration like a man who had won a fortune ir stocks. Sometimes the poor lad was de-pressed like a man who had lost one. It all depended on the way that top spun.

"Now, my dear, you know what I am going to say. Life is like that. We are all spinning tops. We call it by different names, generally something high sound-ing. Science would not call it a top at all, but gyroscope. It amounts to the same thing, call it what you will. Duty, business, fortune, friendship, all gyro-

"But one must do something in order to live," suggested Catherine, "and there is a customer in the shop now. Will you go while I tidy up the house! We have wasted enough time in talking."

"Wasted time in talking," muttered ohn. "Commend me to the man who could not afford to waste time in money

"To be sure, I should not like a man who was too busy to spend any time at home, who barricaded himself with news-

thing to say. "Even though he was grinding out dollars that you might wear diamonds?" said

"If I asked for bread, he would give me stone. No matter how precious, I should starve on it. Many women do. There is a moral as well as a physical necessity." "Kittle, you are turning out a trump. You are beginning to understand your husband and other great things. But to proceed, the business world does need balance; it makes a man one shied. Few men are great and strong in more than one or two directions. We need all round people. Now, when a man has a love of books, music, art or is public spirited, I hold that he has no right to starve himself in all these directions for the sake of worldly success, pinching the angel that the beast may be fed, and when he retires from business, as he sometimes hopes to do, he has lost his capacity to enjoy what is left of life-in fact, there is very little left any-manhood to society."

"Is it practical:" queried Kate, who forgot that she had abandoned that side of the question.

"Yes," resumed John. "There is our good friend in W. who devotes a third of his time to public interests, to the improve-ment of life around him—one of the most prosperous men I know. His wife works along the same line, charming in their home life, raising a family of boys to be good business men and good citizens. The wants of life begin in the physical, but they do not end there, thank God. "John, rou do talk beautiful, as Samanthy Allen would say," remarked Kate mischievously.-Lizzie York Case in Detroit Free Press.

The Ideal Mother. If you will take up one of the great hisories, you will find that where famous teachers have been forgot in famous scien tists summed up in ore line, the wise mother and the compani nable wife have tributes paid to them 1, the great men whom they assisted or to ight. When we say taught, we mean as a mother teaches her children. Is there a finer tribute to religion and to women than that given by the statesman John Rescholph of Reanoke to his mother? Afternoon Tea.

Formal introductions are not usual at afternoon calls, but the hostess should use her discretion in the matter, and, at any rate, should courteously draw into the conversation any guest who shows symptoms of shyness or of being left out in the cold. If the hour of afternoon tea is imminent and the visitor shows signs of departure, a thoughtful hostess would say: "Tea will be here in a minute. Won't you stay and have some?" If it is brought into the room during the visit, it would naturally be offered to the guest or guests. In everyday life the arrangements of this informal meal should be simple but soigne. Anything fussy or elaborate is out of place. The tablecloth should be plain white, and the food provided is generally thin broad and butter, white and brown cake, and in cold weather, or if the hostess has Scotch proclivities, hot scones, crumpets or muffins are among her favor-

Plates should always be found at afternoon tea, and salt must not be forgotten The tea cozy, beloved of the typical old maid, is a relic of barbarism and a revelamaid, is a role of caronism and a reves-tion of poverty, as extinct as the dode in any good house. Hair Washing.

Don't wash the hair too often. It weakens it. Once a week in summer, once a month in winter, is sufficient. Always dry the scalp carefully after washing. This is one of the reasons why a professional hairdresser does his work so much better than a lady can do it at home, for he has his drying machine to do it in five minutes while she has to sit with her hair spread out for hours and then perhaps does not thoroughly dry it. Use topid water, with a little bicarbonate of soda added, and for soap that containing the least alkali and most glycerin is the best. Don't strangle your hair to death by braiding it tightly at night. Don't crush its life out by heavy pads, hats or bonnets. Don't polson it by quack nostrums and lotions, and don't starve it for need of a good hair tonic at times. Trim it at least once a month Nothing is a more valuable preventive of falling hair than this. Brush it at least once a day and use a brush with long bristles, soft and yielding.

Needles In the Body.

Things in the tissnes of the body, such as needles, etc., often make wonderful journeys through the body and come out years afterward in quite a different region from that at which they entered. These bodies should always be extracted, because there is a danger of their invading some important organ—e. g., the heart—as they work their way through the tissues by the movements of the muscles. The new photography has been of great service in showing physicians the precise localities of such bodies and of guiding them to their easy

Women who sleep a great deal and comfortably, who are addicted to maps and regard nine hours of wholesome rest as absolutely requisite to their physical well being, are the women who defy the frosting hand of time. Those are the women whos wrinkles are few and far between, and whose eyes remain the brightest and cheeks the resiest for the longest period after the bloom of youth has fled. No less notable a beauty than Diane de Poictiers, who retained her irresistible loveliness until her seventleth year, recognized the value of sleep as a preventive of wrinkles. Indeed, so fearful was she of losing a moment of perfect rest that, mistrusting the beds of her friends, she carried her own, with its splendid fittings, on all her journeys .-Philadelphia Inquirer.

A Charming Hanging. A charming design wrought across the top of a pale white satin hanging is of a dainty French basket like those seen in the embroderies of the Louis XV period, filled with small blossoms, roses and forgetme-nots that tumble over its sides. From this basket on either side is swung a festoon of coses and forgetmenots. This part of the design covers the top of the hanging. At each end of the festion there is a graceful bow of floating ribbons, through which are caught ribbons that drop well down on the sides and that support other quaint baskets of flowers, one on each side of the curtain. The baskets are worked in gold threads, the ribbons are done in gold colored silks, and the flowers, in soft pinks and blues, are in solid embroidery.

For Pink Cheeks.

Pink cheeks are much better obtained with exercise than with cosmetics. If a girl does not wish to appear at the break-fast table with a pale, sallow face, she should go out into the fresh morning air and take a short, brisk walk. Rouge will supply the pinkness, but the morning sun has a cruel way of showing up the effects of rouge.

Sunlight is a splendid cosmetic. Seek the sunlight is the navice of all present day hygienists. Patients on the sunny side of the hospital ward recover soonest. The woman who always walks on the sunny side of the street outlives her shade seeking sister by ten years. Sleep in rooms where the sun has shed its rays all day,

Successful Dressing.

Suitability is the secret of successful dress, and there is nothing so annoying as the reception of an invitation which leaves one in doubt of the proper costume. Men have only two styles of dress-morning and evening-but ladies have a number of little gradations, any departure from which would stamp them as outsiders at once. New forms of entertainments are constantly being invented in society, and people who are not quite "in the swind" may be excused if they find it a little difficult to know what to wear. There is nothing so uncomfortable in this world as being overdressed, but being underdressed runs it close, and the woman is fortunate who avoids these two extremes.

The highest mark of esteem a woman can give to a man is to ask his friendship and the most signal proof of ber indifference is to offer him hers.
