HYBRIDS.

The Chinese Pheasaut is Successfully Crossed with the Domestic Fowl,

Dr. J. C. Gray, of this city, has a pair of hybrids, the result of a cross between the male China pheasant and the domestic hen. Many attempts have been made to induce the pheasant and the chicken to cross, while kept in confinement, but to the knowledge of the writer the efforts in that direction have always proven futile. This is doubtless due to the wild nature of the pheasant, which causes it to leave off all its regular babits when placed in confluement. However, when allowed to pursue its own course in its wild state, the bird has accomplished hat which it refused to do under cap-

It was by mere accident that Dr. Gray secured the birds he now has in his passession. The eggs were pro-cured and hatched in the usual maner and no one knew anything about the cross between the pheasant and chicken until the half-breeds had reached sufficient size to begin to as-sume the proportions and character of their parents, which revealed the cross beyond a doubt.
Dr. Gray has an orchard a short distance north of town, where he keeps a number of chickens. China phensants frequently come in the viciuity of barnyards and have been seen to mix with Dr. Gray's chickens. it was white running together thus in their wild state that the cross was effeeted. Dr. Gray also keeps hickens at the home of his father, J. G. Gray, in this city and about eight months ago brought a setting of eggs from his orchard and hatched them under a hen in his yard in town. hybrid hen and rooster are from two eggs that were in this setting.

The male has more of a resemblance to the pheasant family, while the female favors the domestic fowl. Judging from its color, the male is sup-posed to be crossed with the Domi-After discussion Mr Gray amended carried.
