From the Jacksonville, Fia Times. The friends of our soldiers now enroute to Cubs, and of the others about to go, need not be concerned about them so far as the climate is concerned. Whatever is to be said of the unbealthiness of certain parts of the island, the temperature the Gulf Coast of the United States, Florida in summer, and in Southern California in winter.

Take first the temperature. The average summer temperature of Havana by months, compares as follows with that of New Orleans:

Month.	Havana,	Orlean
May	78.8	74.6
June	81.5	80.3
July	82.4	82.4
August	82.2	81.5
September		78.3

The average July temperature of Havana is thus precisely the same as that of New Orleans, and the average temperature of each of the other summer months is not to other duties around the grounds. enough higher in Havana than in New Orleans for any one to discover the difference. The highest temperature record in Havana in the ten years 1888-'97 was 100.6 degrees, and 100 degrees was passed only this once. We all know that several hundred thousand American citizens live through the summer in New Orleans without making any fuss about it, and so far as the heat is concerned, they do the same in Cuba.

warmer than Havana, but not enough warmer to be troubled with the excess. The average annual temperature of Havana is 77 de grees. From the meager data available the annual mean of Santiago is 80 degrees, with an average difference between the warmest and coldest month of only 6 degrees.

The Cuban rainfall is greatest in October, and next greatest in June. July and August show a let-up from the June precipitation. A Government report says that the new property they lately bought, have short duration, and this is particularly the case during the summer months," Moreover, "the rains, although copious, are of short the leading mines of Bohemia, with a Members and visiting brethren cordist- purchased from F L Chambers on the duration, and those days on which reasonable amount of development ly invited to attend. showers fall are, in general, perfeetly cloudless." This description is almost a perfect picture of Los Angeles in December and January, have lately uncovered and sunk a shaft and is suggestive of typical July on a big chimney, east of the first and August conditions in Jacksonville.
