MONEY VALUES.

The gold standard advocates would practically destroy onefourth our metallic money by discrediting silver. Who would be benefitted? Not the laborer, farmer and producer, for the artificially created scarcity of money would render it more valuable, consequently labor and its products of less value. The men that own the gold and loan it would reap to beneat. Cut short the products or labor supply of a community or nation one-fourth would not the remainder appreciate in value? Money has a market value equally with wool, oats and wheat. Shorten the supply you increase the value. Capital is aware of this, and you find the representatives thereof solidly arrayed in favor of the gold standard.

But why should the workingmen and producers put their paws into the fire to rake out golden chestnuts for the men who deal in money as a commodity?
