The Laughing Philosopher.

- I know a funny little boy, The happiest ever born; His face was like a beam of joy, Although his clothes are torn.
- I saw him tumble on his nose. And waited for a groan; But how he laughed! Do you suppose He struck his funny bone?
- There's sunshine in each word he speaks: His laugh is something grand; Its ripples overrun his cheeks,
- He laughs the moment he awakes And till the day is done; The school-room for a joke he takes, His lessons are but fun.

Like waves on snowy sand.

- No matter how the day may go, You cannot make him cry; He's worth a dozen boys I know, Who pout and mope and sigh.
- He's plump and round-he once was sline I have not told you half; I soon expect to hear of him Exploding in a laugh!

Struggle with an Alligator. BY CAPT, CHARLES STEADMAN.

Methods of Distinguished Authors.

It is interesting to know what method most distinguished authors followed in the composition of their works. David Hume, for instance, wrote rapidly, but corrected slowly and laboriously. His pages are full of crasures. In the writings of Gibbon the erasures are tew, for he made all his corrections in his mind, and never wrote a sentence till he had balanced and amended it to his cutire satisfaction, either seated in his arm-chair, or walking on his balcony at Laysanne, with the lake of Geneva below him. Dr. Adam her reasoning powers and her petulant Smith walked slowly up and down his room white dictating to his clerk. Hence it is alleged that his sentences are nearly all of the same length, each containing The Yale Freshman had a hard time of exactly as much as the clerk could take it in the Eighteenth Century. In Scrib- down while the doctor took a single turn. College by Henry A. Beers, who quotes turing he was more dependent than the "Every student," runs one of the old of his class. "During a whole session," laws, "shall be called by his sir name, he said, "a certain student, with a plain except he be the son of a nobleman, or a but expressive countenance, was of great knight's eldest son." As between the use to me in judging of my success. He college classes, a strict subordination was sat conspicuously in front of a pittar. I enforced, and a somewhat laborious eti-quette prevailed between Faculty and leaned forward to listen, all was right, students. The Freshmen were almost in the condition of fags in the English pubbut if he leaned back in an attitude of lie schools. The following statutes from listlessness, I felt that all was wrong, and book of "Freshmen Laws" seem incred- that I must either change the subject or ible, but were gravely meant, and put in the style of my address." Adam Smith distiked nothing more than that moral "The Freshmen, as well as other under- apathy-that obtuseness of moral percepgraduates, are to be uncovered, and are tion-which prevents man from not only forbidden to wear their hats (un!ess in seeing clearly, but feeling strongly, the stormy weather) in the front door-yard of broad distinction between virtue and vice, the President's or Professor's house, or within ten rods of the person of the President sall indulgent even to the blackest ident, eight rods of a Professor, and five crimes. At a party at Dalkeith Palace, where Mr .---, in his mawkish way, was "A Freshman shall not play with any finding palliations for some villainous members of an upper class without being transaction, the Doctor waited in patient silence until he was gone, then exclaimed :
