John P. Hale, for so many years a leading member of the United States Senate, did not especially distinguish himself as a scholar, but his genial wit made him a general favorite. His jokes had vitality enough to survive the many college generations that have succeeded him. In his Latin not infrequently the author's meaning escaped him, but it was strangely clear to him when he edified the class by rendering Horace's saying: "Ohimidium facti, qui capit, habet" ("Well begun; half done.") "He that is well leave, "Scribner."

There he coolly remained and as composedly watched his train as it moved way from him. Before he realized his predicament the train was half a mile off and around the curve. He then exclaimed: "Oh thunder! I am left by my own train." He then hired a wagon and was driven over to the Harlem Ruilroad, and there he took a train for Millerton, "Ohimidium facti, qui capit, habet" ("Well begun; half done.")
