

PERSONAL.

TEKNOLOG has annotated his poems. Dr. HOLLAND has made $100,000 from his writings.

PROF. DAVID SWING, of Chicago, is at Long Branch.

Ex-MINISTER SCHENCK has returned to private life.

HENRY VINCENT is coming over to lecture again this fall.

WHITTIER lives frugally on $1,000 a year from the muse.

SINAISSA SANKEY proposes to settle permanently in Boston.

HAWTHORNE never received from his writings enough to live on.

DAVID DUDLEY FIELD is said to receive the largest fee of any lawyer in the country.

The mother of Charlie Ross is at Brookfield, Mass., with her remaining children.

BRYANT has made $400,000 from his Evening Post and only $15,000 from his books.

EMERSON lives on a small patrimony and has made only $20,000 from all his works.

Mr. GEORGE WILLIAM CUTTS declines to be a candidate for the governorship of New York.

CHARLES FRANCIS ADAMS is talked of for Governor of Massachusetts by the Democrats.

CARDINAL McCLOSKEY goes to ride every day at Newport. His health is much improved.

The nearest living relation to George Washington is said to be Dr. Lawrence A. Washington of Texas.

Mr. MOODY has moved into his new house at Northfield, Massachusetts, just adjoining his birthplace.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL is a possible candidate for Congress. So is President Chubbourn, of Williams College.

In September, in Schenck, N. Y., a monument will be dedicated to David Williams, the captor of Major Ande.

BAVARD TAYLOR gets $50,000 a year as editorial writer on the Independent. His works have yielded him some $200,000.

Mr. MOODY's church in Chicago has been dedicated. It cost $60,000 and is all paid for—a condition precedent to its dedication.

ANDREW JOHNSON'S only son, Captain Andrew Johnson, editor of the Greenville Intelligencer, is a candidate for the State Legislature.

CHENKAS was once asked by one of his brother judges, "Do you see anything ridiculous in this wig?" "Nothing but the head," was the reply.

SWEDEN is preparing to receive right royally Mrs. Nilsson. Twelve concerts are announced from the 10th of August to the 10th of September.

IF CUSTER had made a successful attack and wiped out the Indian campmen, women, and children, would it have been a "butchery" or a "glorious victory?"

HORATIO SEYMOUR was elected orator and Henry W. Longfellow the poet for the coming Centennial of the surrender of Burgoyne, which will occur on the 17th of October, 1877, at Saratoga.

DR. WATER CHANNING died in Brookline, Mass., on Thursday, in his ninety-first year. He was a brother of William Ellery Channing, and practised his profession with great success, in Boston.

WHEN the Emperor of Russia met the Emperor of Austria at Reichstadt, on the 12th inst., he embraced him three times, kissing him each time on the cheek. Yon Don Pedro never once offered to embrace President Grant.

THE one-hundredth birthday of Mr. Windsor Howe was celebrated by his friends and family at Bolton, Massachusetts, July 31st. The aged man was able to appear at the table and direct the festivities with a proud and cheerful air.

"I REMEMBER," said the celebrated Wesley, "bearing my father say to my mother—How could you have the patience to tell that blockhead the same thing twenty times over?" said she, "if I had told him but ninety-nine times I should have lost all my labor."

MR. APPLETON OAKSMITH delivered the Fourth of July oration at Beaufort, North Carolina. It was the first celebration of the day there since the civil war. The oration was delivered in the open air to a great crowd. The harbor was filled with boats from the surrounding country.

It is not generally known that Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes is the inventor of the common hand microscope. Such is the fact, however, and his work has been given to the world without the protection of a patent. He has an immense collection of microscopic views from all parts of the earth.

MR. SANKEY, the singing partner in Mr. Moody's work, passed through Saratoga Springs last Friday on his way to Boston, where he leaves his wife and son for a brief period. He contemplates living in Boston permanently. He says that he has received invitations to be present at nearly every camp meeting in the country, but declines because he needs rest, and does not intend to imperil his voice by participating in open air exercises.—Home Journal.

HON. GEORGE E. POOT died recently in Cincinnati, Ohio, at the age of 53 years and 8 months. He was born in Cincinnati, November 28, 1823, and graduated at Miami University in 1840. He was a lawyer by profession. During the Mexican war he was a captain in the Fourth Regiment of Ohio Volunteers. He was representative in the legislature in 1848 and 1849; was appointed Solicitor to the city of Cincinnati in 1850; was Attorney-General of the State in 1851, and elected Senator in Congress from March 4, 1855, for six years, and was a member of the Committee on Public Lands and on the Judiciary.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

A Knowing Coon.

A writer in an English journal, Once a Week, vouches for the following story, though he admits that the reader may think it a "mere Yankee yarn."

I was living down South some years ago—that is to say, in Georgia. One day, Pete, a gentleman of ebony countenance, opal eyeballs and ivory teeth, a thoroughly merry darkey, who was my companion in many a fishing trip, came zipping up to me with something tied up in a pocket handkerchief, and on opening it there rolled out a furry-looking little animal, which proved to be a half-grown raccoon, one which, on arriving at maturity, was as tame and companionable as a dog.

He was a handsome little fellow, in his dusky gray coat, white-ringed tail, and a patch here and there of white. But it is not of his personal appearance that I wish to tell, but his antics and tricks. In the former he resembled a kitten in the way in which he would roll over, curve his tail, or seize my hand and pretend to bite it; in the latter he was a little more than a kitten, and he was a little more than a kitten.

Take him down in a lagoon on a moonlight night, and "Dick" would be in his glory. He would scoot out to an overhanging bough, and thoroughly assimilate himself with it by crouching so close that you could hardly make him out; and then he would allow his bushy tail to droop into the water, moving it carefully about, and waiting for a bite.

He did not wait long, when a fish, for which he was again I have said, would be watching him, till I have become aware of a slight movement in the water, when, with a spring that was like lightning, "Dick" would throw himself ashore, and in nine cases out of ten with a crab tight hold of his lovely tail.

Then there would be a slight struggle. "Dick" would sit up on his hind legs, with the captive that had tried hard to regain the water, hold his prey in his jaws, and, with a look of triumph, would drop it, before going to fish for another.

But they were not crabs which always came to "Dick's" fishing tackle. Before now a little alligator of some eighteen inches long would seize it, when suddenly, as if by magic, it would be gone, and the alligator would be left with a very bad case of indigestion.

ANDREW JOHNSON'S only son, Captain Andrew Johnson, editor of the Greenville Intelligencer, is a candidate for the State Legislature.

CHENKAS was once asked by one of his brother judges, "Do you see anything ridiculous in this wig?" "Nothing but the head," was the reply.

SWEDEN is preparing to receive right royally Mrs. Nilsson. Twelve concerts are announced from the 10th of August to the 10th of September.

IF CUSTER had made a successful attack and wiped out the Indian campmen, women, and children, would it have been a "butchery" or a "glorious victory?"

HORATIO SEYMOUR was elected orator and Henry W. Longfellow the poet for the coming Centennial of the surrender of Burgoyne, which will occur on the 17th of October, 1877, at Saratoga.

DR. WATER CHANNING died in Brookline, Mass., on Thursday, in his ninety-first year. He was a brother of William Ellery Channing, and practised his profession with great success, in Boston.

WHEN the Emperor of Russia met the Emperor of Austria at Reichstadt, on the 12th inst., he embraced him three times, kissing him each time on the cheek. Yon Don Pedro never once offered to embrace President Grant.

THE one-hundredth birthday of Mr. Windsor Howe was celebrated by his friends and family at Bolton, Massachusetts, July 31st. The aged man was able to appear at the table and direct the festivities with a proud and cheerful air.

"I REMEMBER," said the celebrated Wesley, "bearing my father say to my mother—How could you have the patience to tell that blockhead the same thing twenty times over?" said she, "if I had told him but ninety-nine times I should have lost all my labor."

MR. APPLETON OAKSMITH delivered the Fourth of July oration at Beaufort, North Carolina. It was the first celebration of the day there since the civil war. The oration was delivered in the open air to a great crowd. The harbor was filled with boats from the surrounding country.

It is not generally known that Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes is the inventor of the common hand microscope. Such is the fact, however, and his work has been given to the world without the protection of a patent. He has an immense collection of microscopic views from all parts of the earth.

MR. SANKEY, the singing partner in Mr. Moody's work, passed through Saratoga Springs last Friday on his way to Boston, where he leaves his wife and son for a brief period. He contemplates living in Boston permanently. He says that he has received invitations to be present at nearly every camp meeting in the country, but declines because he needs rest, and does not intend to imperil his voice by participating in open air exercises.—Home Journal.

HON. GEORGE E. POOT died recently in Cincinnati, Ohio, at the age of 53 years and 8 months. He was born in Cincinnati, November 28, 1823, and graduated at Miami University in 1840. He was a lawyer by profession. During the Mexican war he was a captain in the Fourth Regiment of Ohio Volunteers. He was representative in the legislature in 1848 and 1849; was appointed Solicitor to the city of Cincinnati in 1850; was Attorney-General of the State in 1851, and elected Senator in Congress from March 4, 1855, for six years, and was a member of the Committee on Public Lands and on the Judiciary.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture, being one of his most marked features. General Terry was appointed at the close of the rebellion a full brigadier-general in the Regular Army, to date from January 15th, 1865, and was placed in command of the Department of the James, with headquarters at Richmond, Va. His successful campaign against the rebellious Indians in Minnesota attracted attention to him as an Indian fighter, and his service during the past few years has been principally on the Western frontier.

GEN. TERRY, who commands the military forces in Wyoming, now operating against the Sioux, is a native of Connecticut. He entered the service in May, 1861, as Colonel of the Second Connecticut Volunteers, and in September of the same year he assumed command of the Seventh Connecticut. On April 25th, 1872, he was made a Brigadier-General of Volunteers, and on January 15th, 1875, he was promoted to Major-General. His record during the war was conspicuous, the daring assault upon Fort Fisher, resulting in its capture,