- 'Twas on a beauteous summer morn, When things were up and comin', And all among the punkin vines, The bumble bees were humtuin'; I took an early half-mile walk As everybody orter.
- When in the cow-path I was met By Widder Spriggins' daughter.
- Her eyes were black as Davids' ink, Her cheeks were red as fury, And one smack of her luscious lips
- Would bribe a judge or jury.

 I bow'd-she church-eyed just the way Her nice old mar had taught her ; She smiled-and oh ! my heart was gone
- To Widder Spriggias' daughter. Says I "My dear, how do you do?" Says she, "I reckon finely;" Says I, "Of all the girls I know, You look the most divinely. I snatched a kiss-she slapped my face,
- In fact, just as she orter ! "Behave yourself, how dare you sir !" Cried Widder Spriggins' daughter.
- Just then an old rampageous sheep, Who had been feeding near, sir. Squared off, and like a ton of bricks He took me with his head, sir.
- I landed in a pond, chuck full Of frogs and filthy water. And there she stood and larfed and larfed,
- That Widder Spriggins' daughter. I rather guess I crawled out quick, Picked up my hat and mizzled, While love's bright torch so lately lit
- Out in the freg pond fizzled. Well, she was married vesterday, A lawyer chap has get her; So I'll forget, if not forgive, The Widder Spriggins' daughter.
