There should be no crowding, no close confinement, but plenty of air, plenty of light, security for trying, cleanliness, good water, variety of food—corn and buckwheat as a base. The buckwheat should be ground and made into cake, mainly, though also fed in the grain.

That a young hen will lay better than an old one; that its flesh is also better; that some breeds, like the French, are preferred for the table.

That the different popular breeds all do well, though varying with different owners, showing that keeping or locality has an influence.

That crosses sometimes are as good as the breeds whence they are obtained. Thus the Black Spanish and Brahma couple well together, both for laying and hatching; but the cross must not be perpetuated by itself; in this case it has deteriorated. Keep up from the original stock and it will be reliable. Other crosses have also done well. Many remarkable cases are reported, some of which have come under our own cognizance.

The Brahma and Black Spanish cross will lay, with slight interruption, the year round. It will continue to lay, if sufficient and regular food be given it, in a barn or other outbuilding exposed to the cold. The greatest success has been obtained in this way with this cross.

It has long been known, and is now more apparent, that there is no profit, but loss, in keeping the common hen, which will seldom lay in winter, and only when its quarters are made warm and pleasant as in summer.

The breeds, and care with them, are sure to secure success. This has sometimes been obtained when they have been neglected, and sometimes not; but we have never known success to fail where care is taken, and the principles above enumerated carried out. Room, contentment, with a sufficiency of food, are the main things. Then a good breed—nonsitter for eggs—and there will be a balance on the right side of the ledger. It is best to begin on a small scale, and increase, dividing the number as it increases into as many communities as space and number require. If a dozen or fifteen hens are found profitable, the dozen or fifteen hens and their space need not be repeated. This will make so many distinct henneries, though joined together, separated only by a partition. The principle here is, that hens want to be acquainted with each other, used to each other; in other words, a family. With a large number, even though space be given them, there will be an air of strangeness and fear never wholly overcome. Hence the secret of dividing into small communities.—National Live Stock Journal.

A ONE-LEGGED Yankee orator, named Jones, was pretty successful in bantering an Irishman, when the latter asked him: "How did you come to lose your leg?" "Well," said Jones, "on examining my pedigree, and looking up my descent, I found there was some Irish blood in me, and becoming convinced that it had settled in that left leg, I had it cut off at once." "Be the powers," said Pat, "it would have been a better thing if it had settled in your head."

A SHREWISH wife, being very ill, called her husband to come and sit by her bedside. "This is a sad world, my dear," said the wife, plaintively. "Very," coincided the man. "Were it not for you I should love to quit it." "Oh, my dear," eagerly responded the husband, "how can I interfere with your happiness? Go, by all means!" The lady got well.

THE three things most difficult are to keep a secret, to forget an injury, and to make good use of leisure.

THE LARGEST FARMER OF THE AGE.—The Chico Enterprise of the 16th has the following: "H. J. Glenn, an enterprising farmer of Colusa county Cal., will put in, on his little farm, near Jacinto, this year, 40,000 acres of wheat, from which we make the following estimate: At 25 bushels per acre—which is not a high estimate of the present season—the yield will be 1,000,000 bushels or 60,000,000 pounds. At 137 lbs. to the sack it will require 437,000 sacks. At 300 tons per barge load, on the Sacramento river, it will take one steamer two years to deliver it to San Francisco, allowing one trip per week, and will take 20 ships, of 1,300 tons each, to deliver it in England. But the most important calculation still remains to be made especially to Mr. Glenn, and that is, the calculation of the net profit accruing from the 1,000,000 bushels that it will bring him on the ranch, at $1 per bushel.
