

SIZE IN THE EYE.—Size with the eye, as with the brain, is generally conceded to be a measure of capacity. A large eye has a larger range of vision, as it unquestionably has of expression. A large eye will take in more at a glance, though perhaps with less attention to detail, than a small one. Generally speaking, large eyes see things in general, and small eyes things in particular. The one sees many things as a whole, considering them in a philosophical and speculative way, often seeing through and beyond them; the other sees fewer things but usually looks keenly into them, and is appreciative of detail. Some eyes, however, look at everything and yet see nothing. Fullness of the eye, causing a bulging of the lower eyelids, is the well-known sign of language. Persons with this sign have not only a speaking eye but also a speaking tongue; whereof their fellows do not long remain in ignorance. A general projection or fullness of the eye above and below, which brings the eyeball forward on a line with the face and eyebrow, denotes the quality of physical perception or the capacity to see quickly whatever appears upon the surface of things. A person with such an eye, upon entering a room for the first time, would rapidly note the shape, size, arrangement and general appearance of the different articles of furniture in it, the color of the walls, curtains, etc., take in with equal facility the color of the eyes and hair, size and appearance of any person who might be present. In looking at a picture, such a person would at once incline to examine the details of color, number, grouping, attitude, and costume of the figures composing it.—Annual of Phenology.

THE DOWNFALL OF TWEED.—The New York correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette, speaking of Tweed and his faithful wife, says: "They were married when the man was a chairmaker, and they might have had a happy career had the former remained honest. They lived in a plain manner, mingled with mechanic's society, and were the parents of two boys and two girls, good looking and healthy children. The era of meretricious splendor has come and gone like a dream. The girls are married. Each had a diamond wedding and each has sunk into obscurity and poverty. The two sons held fine appointments in the service of the ring, but they are now only lounging around the city. A full million and a half has passed into the hands of her lawyers, and her husband is still a prisoner. A seedy and corpulent old man inhabiting a pair of rooms in Ludlow Street Jail is all that is left of one who has been Alderman, Congressman, chairmaker, lawyer, Commissioner of Parks, Public Buildings and Docks, State Senator, and for seven years the autocrat of this city. The only redeeming feature is the faithful wife, who is reducing herself to poverty in hope of obtaining her husband's release."

PORTER-HOUSE STEAK.—Few of our readers probably know who the name originated for the meat they like so well. An exchange says: "This term has an American origin. In 1814, a hungry pilot entered a New York porter-house on Pearl street, where lunch as well as drink could be obtained. Morrison, the keeper, had nothing but beef ordered for the next day's family dinner, in the shape of a sirloin roasting-piece, and from which he offered the pilot a cut, which he accepted. After ravenously devouring it, he turned to his host, who was expecting dissatisfaction, with the order, 'Messmate, another steak just like that.' And having finished his steaks and porter, the old pilot ordered his steaks to be 'cut off the roasting-piece for the future,' and soon his companions learned the good that lies in the 'small loin steak,' and Morrison was obliged to order his butcher to cut his sirloin into steaks for his customers, and the butcher, ordering his subordinates and messengers, designated them as 'porter house steaks,' and increasing custom and extended repute soon established the term now so common in all eating-houses of our country and England."

CARE OF HORSES' FEET.—With Fall rains comes the mud, and extra precaution should be used to keep the horses' feet in a healthy condition. Wash the fetlocks frequently and with castile soap-suds if there is any irritation of the skin; then, after wiping dry, apply a little lard or sweet oil. Grease-heel or scratches, in cold weather is much more frequent and much more serious than in warm weather. A horse that is well cared for will never suffer from either, as the disorders are generally results of neglect.

SQUIRRELS AND CASTOR BEANS.—The Visalia Delta says: "A gentleman who knows says that in order to get rid of gophers and squirrels he will, the coming season, plant castor beans around the border of his fields; the bean plant is a deadly poison to these pests, which 'put out' for other fields to depredate. The beans also pays to cultivate, the market price being four cents per pound in San Francisco. The true castor bean of commerce, it should be remembered, is also poisonous in its green state if taken into the human stomach."

THOSE indebted to the TIMES office will oblige us by calling and settling immediately. Our Winter's stock of goods has arrived, and we need the money to pay for it.

ALL SORTS OF HAIRS.—I suppose you youngsters think all kinds of hairs are alike, except as to color; but that is only because your eyes are not very sharp. If your eyes were as sharp as a microscope, you could tell from the tiniest slice of a hair whether it grew on a boy or a quadruped. A human hair, I am told, looks in that searching little instrument like a hollow tube, quite transparent and marked with irregular lines around it. On looking very closely, these are seen to be the ends of separate surface coats, or bark of the hair. Think of your hairs having bark! Inside the thin, scaly covering is a fibrous substance from the bulb, where it begins, to the point. The color of the hair is decided by the color of the fluid that fills this transparent tube. A cat's hair looks under this prying instrument like the trunk of an old rugged palm tree, while a bat's hair resembles flowers of a trumpet shape, stuck into each other to form a chain. A bat from India has the trumpet-shape cups expanded very wide, and notched on the edge. Hair from the head of a bee is pointed and set with short hairs standing straight out from the stem; and the hairs of a caterpillar are like stout, horny rods, drawn to a point, and set with spines on each side. This is very queer, but there is another thing about it. If the hairs of sheep and other animals whose hair is used in manufactures, had not rough seals which clasp and mat together, they could not be made into felting. That is what makes broadcloth and other woolen cloth so firm and strong.—St. Nicholas.

THE POPE'S PERSONAL HABITS.—Pius IX rises at 5 A. M., and from that time till 7:30 is spent in meditation and prayer. After this comes mass, then a slight meal and short repose. Presently the important matter, business correspondence to be reviewed, afterward delicate affairs to be thought over, and most particular private audiences. At 12, Pius is prepared to receive the world. He will see any person of any country or religion, will converse with all and give each his hand to kiss, and makes a pleasant little speech to everyone. Upon larger presentation being made he sits upon his throne and makes more serious and set speeches of a more eloquent nature. He is very fond of being familiar, and prefers to talk as a genial old father; he generally chooses some verse from the Scripture or the litany to discourse upon on solemn occasions, and invariably adapts his address to the circumstances and the people.

MIDDLE LIFE.—The maid of sixteen, disappointed in her handsome boy lover, will grieve and pine for him until she is twenty, then deny that she ever cared for him. The man whose intellect has accumulated a fund of knowledge since the pretty butterfly he once tried to capture has eluded his grasp, now smiles at his own folly, and kisses more fervently the woman he calls wife. The vain desire to attain some great popularity grows weaker as we approach the middle age of life. The thought of fame lessens, and if religious sentiment is developed, a desire to be good rather than great becomes the motive of action. Self grows less important after middle life.

BRIEFLY AND WELL PUT.—The Salem Mercury has this neat bit of a good thing: "There is a certain class of men who are continually running up to us and saying: 'Why don't you give us a paper?' If I was running a newspaper I would do it." Our invariable reply has been, if they are anxious to exorcise anybody they can do so at the reasonable rate of ten cents a line. This invariably quiets them. They are willing enough for us to get into trouble, but when we offer to let them fight their own battles they suddenly discover that it is not their business, and go off and call us afraid because we refuse to do what they are afraid to.

SMALL is the sum that is required to patronize a newspaper, amply rewarded is its patron, I care not how humble and unpretending the gazette which he takes. It is next to impossible to fill a sheet with printed matter without putting in something worth the subscription price. Every parent whose son is away from home at school should supply him with a newspaper. I well remember what a marked difference there was between my schoolmates who had and had not access to newspapers. Other things being equal, the first were always decidedly superior to the last in debate, composition and general intelligence.—Daniel Webster.

A FACETIOUS boy asked one of his playmates why a hardware dealer was like a bootmaker. The latter, somewhat puzzled, gave it up. "Why," said the other, "because one sold the nails and the other nailed the soles."
