We suppose that when the entire Russian army went marching over the pontoon bridges it didn't make one-half the clattering that a ten-year-old boy does when he walks down one flight of stairs.

The Phrenological Journal advises young men to be guided by the shape of the chin in picking out a wife. Inattention to this rule is probably the reason so many husbands are led by the nose.

"'Tis sweet to hear the watch-dog's honest bark," sang Byron; but then Byron probably never tossed upon his sleepless couch half the night praying for a shot-gun of large calibre to take the sweetness out of that bark.

Our poor young men can continue right on marrying heiresses, with the consciousness of having committed no wrong. A Santiam debating society, after a protracted discussion, has decided that it is justifiable to marry for money .
