UNWRITTEN MUSIC.

The world is full of music, not unlike The world is full of music, not unlike lest thoughts of men that never finde a pression, like unse of stabborn speech and langard tongue, such music is not bound to written bars. The case wherein are prisoned fast and strong The grits the genius of the Master gives:
These surge and roll too grand for common ears. Through the dim aisles and lofty waited nave Of great cathedrals; speech of souls too deep For mon of common clay to comprehend.

So, teo, not all who stand on occan's brink And listen quiet to its low, deep roar. With conscloss plashing of the crested waves, Feel the majorite grandeur of its hymn. That swells forth as from 'neath a master's touch, As grand as Ocean's self.

There is the Vesper service of the birds.
Who glorify their Maker with their songs.
They sing at early dawn their matin lay.
At even twitter songs of grateful praise.
And in the breathless hush before the storm They sing: wweet notes await alway The listening car.

The lofty pines, at whisper of the wind,
Make mean and sigh, and chant a pitying dirac.
That finds responsive cheed in many a heart.
There is some music for our every mood;
And all is harmony, for God does naught
That's out of harmony.
