The New York World draws a comparison between the calamity which destroyed Pompeii and Herculaneum and that which resulted in the annihilation of Johnstown, and expresses itself as of the opinion that the latter was the greater misfortune; the loss of life was greater and the destruction more complete. The outburst of Vesuvins, the earthquake of Lisbon and the breaking of the Conemaugh dam will rank together as the greatest of recorded catastrophes.

The kindness of the politicians in the east, who are offering to tell the people of the newly-admitted states how to vote next fall, is not appreciated to the extent that the easterners expected. The fact is, the Northwest contains enough men of ability to get along without intermeddling of ontsiders, and has a refreshing candor about saying so whenever it pleases. Those who are arriving for the purpose of filling the best offices will be grievously disappointed in many instances.

English capital has cornered the matances.

Exclisi capital has cornered the brownies of America, and now it is ammounced that English capital is going to control the retail dry-goods trade of the states. It was popularly supposed that the Harrison administration would prove repellant to British aggression; but, on the contrary, the blarsted Britishers seemed to instinctively recognize their friends behind all the Republican bluster and buncombe. It really begins to look as though we will have to get Congressmen Scott to formulate a Britishgall exclusion measure, similar to his Chinese exclusion bill, if we are to fuffill the promise of our first century, as a covernment of the people.
