DR. Jeffres, physician at the state penitentiary, states that McAllister, the boy murderer, did not die of consumption, but a post-mortem examination revealed that death resulted from suppurative inflammation of the brain, and that the same was hereditary in the family. This disease is a species of insanity, and the state prison therefore was not the proper place for the confinement of the lad. True, McAllister was guilty of a great offense, but his responsibility for the deed will henceforth be questioned. But this brings us to the consideration of the question, what disposition shall be made of such cases? The penitentiary is not the proper place, nor is the criminal insane enough for confinement in an asylum. The state must take this materation of $1000 in the was a stumbling block in the way of accomplishing a purpose connected with the way of accomplishing a purpose connected with the way of accomplishing a purpose the king had in view; a purpose connected with the wool or ewe-lamb traffic by the way. Republican journals like the San Francisco Call still argue that this prohibitive tariff is beneficial to the public, even though conceding that it enables such trusts and combines to exist; for, say they, while foreign competition would undoubtedly cheapen castor oil to the consumer in America at least fifty per cent., and while the trust will undoubted.

Which will no doubt be a pleasant occasion.

The Linkville authorities are enforcing the hog ordinance and the festive porker will not be allowed to roam about at will any longer.

The Call even goes to the absurd length of sounding the alarm that in the event of the tariff being reduced a chum, who will rusticate with him during vaccation. in the event of the tariff being reduced a foreign trust might secure control of America's output of oil and be even more oppressive than the local robbers. We opine that America's statesmanship has not become so degenerate that some scheme of taxation of foreign capital could not be demised under such circumstances that would effectually limit its progression.

Limit who will rusticate with him during valenting transfer of the Willamette valley, has been in this section lately, seeing what the prospects were for opening a bank at Linkville. This is something the county needs badly.
