Monmouth,

To develope these three is the true aim to a great school. Life is carnest, and whoever hopes to reach the highest success must have first the solid foundation of a true manly or womanly character, based upon the love of truth, honor and uprightness; next, intelligence, to com-prehend the great and important facts of life, with their relationships to one another, and last but not least, strength of body to enable him to bear his work lightly and well. The test of a school's work is the success of its students. Every county in the state can bear testimony to the influence of the Normal. Both graduates and students are doing honest, effective work in the public schools and in almost every department of business. Twenty-eight counties sent students last year and in a graduating class of thirty-seven members fourteen counties were rep-
