HOW TO BUILD A SILO.

information Concerning the Foundation, Flooring, Studding, Lining, Corners, Etc. From the Wisconsin experiment station comes some of the best of silo information. Silage being a heavy food, the silo ought to be located as near the stock as possible. Cheap silos are often built in the barn. A root cellar or a portion of it can frequently be converted into a silo by taking out the floor above and building a wooden wall to the height of the barn plates. It should be so located as to be filled from the outside. Ample space for cutting box, or brick is now seldom used unless it is desirable to make use of standing walls of masonry, and even in such cases it is better to have the walls lined with wood.

The cheapest floor consists of solid clay, raised a few inches above the surface of the surrounding ground. The foundation should be of stone or brick, though not necessary. Concrete formed will have "a good day" or a very poor of gravel and cement is equally good, especially up to the surface of the rest should be at least six mehes above the floor and eight inches above the ground surface. The sills should be anchored to the masonry by means of iron rods. They may be made of two pieces of 2 by 8 or 2 by 10 inca stuff spiked together. These should be painted with coal tar and bedded in mortar, with the ends crossed at the corners and well spiked together.

Studs smaller than 2 by 8 inches are seldom used, even for small structures. Experiments carried on at the Wisconsin experimental station, with a view to determine the pressure which was safe to allow on the sides of a silo, Abstracts Made of Titles to showed that to insure against bending the studs should not be less than 10 inches wide for a silo 16 feet deep, and not less than 12 inches for 18 to 26 feet deep, and wider in proportion as the depth increases. In these tests the uprights were 18 inches apart. To be se cured against latteral pressure the studs should be mortared into the sills. Strength in the wails is most essential (the pressure being very great), in order to prevent spreading, which admits the air and spoils the ensilage. The usual lining consists of two thicknesses of boards, joints broken. A thickness of tarred paper should be used between the layers of the boards.

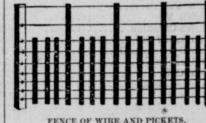

The officers of the Wisconsin station painted silos. If the silo is built inside the barn, no lining on the outside will be required. As a rule, the ensilage ple scope for administrative ability and Refers, by permission, to Ron, H. K. Hanna, Judge of 1st Judicial District, and to any business house in Jacksonville.
