Decorations and Buttons.

It is rather interesting to glance over the floor of the senate and house and note the various decorations or buttons which appear in the lapels of the coats of senators and representatives. Senator Warren of Wyoming, for instance, is never without the tiny bow of red, white and blue ribbon that denotes him to be the possessor of a medal of honor awarded him by congress for gallant action in battle, a distinction which is only shared by one other senator, General Sewell of New Jersey. Senator Quarles wears the button of the order of the Loyal Legion, and quite a number of members of both houses display the crescent and scimiter of the Mystic Shrine. Representative Richardson of Tennessee is the only member who wears conspiciously the starred and barred flag of the Confederacy, showing him to

An Army In Danger.

Latest of Dr. Weir Mitchell's books is "Dr. North and His Friends," a portly volume filled with anecdote and incident, much of which must be based upon the actual experiences of this cultivated physician and scholar. For many years Dr. Mitchell has numbered among his friends no small share of the men worth knowing in the east and from many sources has derived the sayings with which his book abounds, matters made essential to the progress of the story by exemplifying the range of its characters.

Touching on the relative sizes of men is an excellent story of the civil war. When the Confederates were marching through Pennsylvania on their way to the fatal field of Gettysburg they passed a little house at the roadside. On the porch of it stood a little girl and her mother gazing at the unusual sight. Just behind the fence barked Beaver, a little terrier, giving every evidence of his loyalty to the Union by his voice and bearing. At last one of the southern commanders guided his horse on the sidewalk and so roused the dog's ire that the little girl appealed to her mother in fright, saying: "Oh. mamma, mamma! Please don't let Beaver bite that army!"

The King's Revenge.

A quaint little story is told of the late king of Italy and his dislike for music. The king and Queen Margherita lived in such harmony that they could afford to play small jokes upon each other without fear of misunderstanding. Of late years the queen found it necessary to wear glasses in order to read, but the sight of them so annoyed the king that he would say whenever she was about to put them on, "Margherita, put down those glass-

The queen did not obey on one occasion, and the king exclaimed, "Margherita, if you don't put down those classes instantly I shall sing!"

Now, as the king had not the slightest ear for music and his wife had this threat proved efficacious. The glasses were removed.

"As regards the cost of the present boats - namely, $170,000 each - the board is of the opinion that if the cost of construction, with a reasonable profit to the contractors, is alone considered it is a very high price, but if the expenses of developing the boat are taken in consideration the price is not excessive. - - -

"Should congress see fit to authorize any more submarine boats the board is of the opinion that no special type should be specified, but that the secretary of the navy should be given discretion to contract for such boats as in his judgment are likely to prove the most efficient and best suited for naval purposes, thus opening up competition and giving other inventors a chance."

Mutations of Politics. On New Year's day a gentleman and a lady and a child stopped on Pennsylvania avenue in front of the White House and stood for some moments looking through the tall iron fence. Diplomats in much gold lace were hurrying out of the wide door. Carriages were dashing up and away. The army and navy, resplendent in full dress uniforms, were marching in. Down the western walk to the gate and far beyond the curving and angled column of the people stood waiting. The gentleman, the lady and the little girl showed no inclination to enter, but gazed on the scene with evident interest. His thoughts went back easily to the time when the head of the nation standing to receive congratulations was his father. The lady if it pleased her to be reminiscent recalled when her father, a United States senator, passed down the line. And the child possibly had a dim recollection of having been "an administration baby." The group of three said little and when vision was satisfied passed on. Mr. Harris has introduced a bill in
