A Colony of Beavers. H. C. Perkins and Fred Mensch of Grant's Pass, who recently returned from the Cascade forest reserve, where they have been engaged for the past three months in surveying the old military road of the Oregon and Central land grant, report finding a large colony of beavers in the mountains of the Upper Deschutes, near the base of Mt. Scott. There are several hundred beavers in the colony, and they constitute, most probably, the only colony of these much-prized, furry-coated creatures on the coast. They have dammed up the river in many places and formed large lakes, some of be protected, as they occupy a territory in close proximity to Crater Lake National Park, and make a yalthere are a few trappers at work devastating the colony; and unless the
