The Albino Deer. The Scientific American has the following regarding the Albino deer killed in Josephine county some months since: "An albino deer, with a coat as white as the drifting snow, eyes a delicate pink and with a tread as soft and discreet as an elk fawn, was killed in the Canyon mountains of Southern Oregon recently. It was one of the very few albino deer ever seen in the mountains of the west. Old hunters tell of seeing them, usually separate from the main herds, and at various times during the early days; but they were too shy and discreet to be approached near enough for a shot. The deer which was killed in the Canyon mountains was with four other deer at the time it was found, and had not been taken by the hunters. Its white coat made it far more conspicuous than the remainder of the herd, and perhaps for this reason only albino deer are shunned by their mates.

The albino deer bears exactly the same relation to the deer family that the albino of the American race does to human kind. Aside from its white coat and pink eyes it is like all other deer; possibly its fur is softer and more silky.

The specimen found in the pine forests of the Canyon mountains will be made a part of the exhibit of albino mammals at the Smithsonian Institute.
