· Connection .- In speaking of the difference between the products obtained from crushing gold quarts with mills and with arastras, in last week's paper, we stated that one or two instances had occurred in which quartz sent to the mill had barely paid expenses of crusting, while a quantity taken from the same lodes had yielded from twenty to thirty dollars per ton, crushed in arostras. The statement was made upon the representations of persons whom we believed. We have been since as-The greatest difference so far discovered between the amounts obtained from rock taken from the same lode, and crushed by mill and with arastras, is only one dollar per ton in favor of the arastra. But the much greater quantity which the mill can crush more than the arastra would give the preference to the mill when adjacent to the lodes,
