The Northern Mines and the "Times." It is astonishing how small a pebble a person will sometimes stumble over. We have managed to steer clear of some big boulders and good sized rocks in newspaper navigation. but at last have been brought up all a standing, well nigh wrecked, on the smallest specimen of tree stones. We have sinned, most prievously sinued. But our punishment has been terrible. The Portland Traces has pitched into us, and if not demolished, we are shocked. Let us briefly state the manner of our transpression, in order that renders may know why the Nemeris of the Times has been roused to thus make a warning and an example of us to others whose temerity may overlean their discretion : The Times has been telling wonderful stories of late about the extraordinary Walla Walla. Almost every issue contained sensation rumors, always stating what unprecedentedly rich products were being obtained at the mines, but somehow there never appeared any real evidence of the fact in ship ments or receipts of the dust-save in rare Instances, of income derable sums and having did not intend to exaggerate, but their statefrish in our memory the wonderful stories which attended the gold excitements of Gold Blaff Gold Lake, Kern River, and family Praser river, we rather doubted the correctness of the Times' reports, without, however, reflecting in the slightest degree upon the known verseity of its editor. To atrengthen us in this doubt, there were statements and opinions weekly given in the Portland cotemporaries of the imprecable Times, calculated to produce the impression, particularly upon persons at a distance, that that paper was either engaged in a scheme of grandeur, or was being badly sold. At all events, we did doubt the big stories, and in an article, at least courteous! written, two weeks ago, said as much. In it we certainly did not impugn the veracity of papers do not seem to have faith in the extrava- their separate sovereignty. any particular individual, nor did we denounce any person whatever.
