Semi-Weekly Sentinel.

Letter from Orpheus C. Kerr.

Boston, T. T.:—I have been very ill, my boy—I have been very ill; and even now, the hand which grasps the pen trembles with weakness, like the hand of the wind upon a slender reed. I have been reminded of my latter end, and of our excellent National Democratic organization, by an outrage upon my Constitution and the arbitrary arrest of my health—proceedings which seem to prove that the well known Southern Confederacy is entirely right in this war, and that the North is chiefly composed of Honest Old despots. (See proceedings of Democratic Organization, Resolution 290.)

As I lay sick in Strategy Hall the other day, so desolately lonely that I almost wished to die, and without energy enough to finish reading the greenback I had commenced that morning, there came to me an affable Democratic chap who had just recovered from a bilious attack brought on by the Conscription Bill, and wished to consult me as to the propriety of nominating Dr. Brandreth for President of the United States in 1865.

"Why, my future Jefferson," says I feebly, "what will you do with McClellan, then?"

"Really," says he, just stepping across the ward to spit upon a copy of the Tribune, which served as a window curtain—"really, I forgot all about that manly form. 'Oh!' says the pleasant Democratic chap, replacing the Constitution in his hat, from which it had just fallen, 'oh! what heroism do we find embodied in that youthful shape! The voice of an assembled universe asks: 'Shall George B. McClellan go unrewarded?' There is no echo at the time. It asks again: 'Who, then, shall be President of the United States in 1865?' And echo triumphantly answers—General George Barnum McClellan!"

Here the affable democratic chap took off his spectacles, and beamed undignifiedly at a small black bottle on the table.

"But," says I, softly, "his name is not George Barnum McClellan at all. His middle name is not Barnum."

"Hem," says the Democratic chap, with a severe aspect, "I don't know that it is. Really," says the Democratic chap, hastily picking up his umbrella and moving away; "really, I don't know that it is."

Mistakes, my boy, will happen in the best regulated organizations; and if we construe them maliciously, we deserve, like a parcel of scandal-mongering old Bohemians, to be confined all our lives to small coups of Phineas T.

It was during my illness that the adoring citizens of Mugville discovered that the Venerable Gammon had been defeated ten times in the election for County Clerk in his youth, and frantically instituted an overflowing ovation therefor to that venerable man. I know not, my boy, what this aged and shirt-collared picture of perpetual beneficence has done to be such an idol. I cannot conceive why repeated defeats in his youth should entitle him to the adoration of a fond populace at the present exciting period; but the leading citizens presented him with a silver butter knife and a serenade, my boy; and he made a benignant speech, to show that he and Providence only desired the applause of their own consciences. "My children," says the Venerable Gammon, waving benedictions in his fat and heart-felt manner, "I accept this butter knife—not for my own merits, but because it symbolizes the only true means of restoring that Union of which I am a part. This knife," says the Venerable Gammon, eyeing the costly gift with oily and benignant satisfaction—"this knife teaches us that only feindish Abolitionism would think of using the Sword of Radicalism to conquer the erring Confederacy, which is still our sister, when the Butter-knife of Conservatism was to be had."

Then all the leading citizens of Mugville observed joyfully to each other that the country was redeemed at last, and four-and-twenty reliable morning journals published six columns each about the triumphant progress of the Venerable Gammon in the affections of the people.

Among those present at this sublime ovation, my boy, was an aged chap selling apples, who immediately burst into tears when the voice of the venerable man fell on his ears. On being asked to explain his emotions, he cast his dim eyes upward toward an American flag which was being used by a merchant near by to advertise some patent pills, and says he, brokenly: "When I hear that voice and see that flag all my machood crumbles into scalding tears."

He was an apple-seller of fine feelings, and had once served as a deserter in the Army of the Potomac. Pathetic little incidents like these, my boy, humble though they may be, are pregnant with a deep and touching meaning, of which I have not the remotest conception.

"A, me darlint," cried Jamie O'Falgen to his loquacious sweet-heart, who had given him no opportunity of even answering her remarks, during a two hours' ride behind his little bay nags in his oyster wagon—"are you after knowin' why yer cheeks are like my ponies there?"

"Shure and its because they're red, is it?" quoth blushing Bridget.

"Faith and a better reason than moone-ness. Because there is one ny thin each side of waguin' (wagon) tongue!"

NOVEL WAY TO CURE A BREACHY HORSE.—A correspondent of the Iowa Homestead was out riding the other day with a friend, and observed that one of the horses had a hole in each ear. On inquiring the cause he learned that it was to keep the horse from jumping. "Why," said he, "a horse don't jump with his ears." "You are mistaken about that," replied his friend, "a horse jumps as much with his ears as with his feet, and unless he can have the free use of his ears he cannot jump." He ties the two ears together and has no more trouble with the horse.

WONDERFUL.—The New York Evening Post tells a large story of the freaks of lightning in France. A young girl was struck by lightning and changed to a boy. Whoeason's Western paper remarks: "The very thing wanted in this vicinity. Our women are anxious to enlist, but under existing circumstances the Government will not receive them. Pass the lightning around and let's have the objection removed."

Be content as long as your mouth is full and body covered; remember the poor; kiss the pretty girls; don't rob your neighbor's hen roost; never pick an editor's pocket, or entertain an idea that he is going to treat; kick dull care to the door; black your own boots; sew on your own buttons; and be sure to take a paper, and pay for it. Good, practical advice.

The Louisville Democrat says that while a party of guerrillas were at a dance near Owensburg, Kentucky, and were enjoying it hugely, our men surrounded the house and captured them. They were sent up stairs, and our boys taking their places, "Danced all night, 'till broad daylight, And went home with the girls in the morning."

A drafted soldier in Wisconsin was discharged by the surgeon, on account of having one short leg. Soon after a Irishman that had been drafted, applied for his discharge, claiming that both legs were too short.

HEARING a physician remark that a small blow would break the nose, a rustic standing by exclaimed—"Well I dunno 'bout that. I've blowed my nose pretty hard a good many times and never broke it yet."

It is unquestionably true, says the Bulletin, that the Union cause now wears a brighter aspect than at any previous time since the commencement of our national difficulties.

May our blonde beauties be looked on as forming a portion of the pale of society?

Why is a lovely young lady like a hinge? Because she is something to adore.
