A FRENCH OPINION.—The following is an extract from the Revue National, an organ of the French Liberal party:

It still remains settled in the minds of many persons that the abolition of slavery will have had nothing to do with the causes of the terrible American war. We hear them say continually—above all, in England—Ah, it only worked for the destruction of slavery; but it is entirely a different matter, etc. It becomes more and more probable that the regiments of these emancipated people will not be left without some sort of consolation, for if, as they affirm, the abolition of slavery has been of no service in the cause of this war, we can predict with assurance that it will be greatly affected by the war itself. No! it is impossible that so many millions will have been cast off for a barren and ridiculous triumph. The Republic of Washington leaves to old Europe those glorious butcheries of which a nation believes she has acquired the right to be proud, when one of its soldiers less by three was a crown or a marshal's baton.

It is another notice that the American millions have fallen, and their renown will not be the indigent echo of battles without an object. It will maintain their works after them. As long as their memory remains due to their country, the memory of slavery will be an object of execration. Thus will these legions, prematurely swept away, die battle even after death. Slavery will surely retain the wound it has received, for neither the American people nor humanity itself will cease it for this generation of heroes, which has sacrificed itself almost entirely in order the more certainly to destroy the monster.

And, a few months hence, behold the spectacle that the Republic of the United States will offer to the world! The man who holds between his hands these formidable forces, who has raised more than a million of men, who has received taxes in thousands of millions of money, who has disposed, with a sovereign power, for several years, of the most active, the most courageous and the most wealthy people on the face of the earth; that man will come forward to resign his patriotic dictatorship to the people who have confided it to him, without having made any effort to retain it for a moment longer than it was legally his; he will return into the crowd of his fellow-citizens poorer than the day he issued from it, and no one will dream even for an instant of being surprised! Oh happy land, grand nation, noble example of the purity of its citizens, of honor and of its public virtue!

Nobody but a straight fool any longer doubts that the present wretched Democratic traitor, or that the secessionists in California are not as diabolically hostile to Union men and a Union Government as their Confederates are in any part of the U.S. The sole reason that they do not run in mass into Union men to the mountains or into the sea, is because they are not strong enough—because they fear being cut to pieces or hanged. To call a snarling, thieving, blood-thirsty wolf a noble mastiff, would not make him so, or change the ignoble nature of the despicable beast; nor will the name of Democratic divert the sense of reasonable men from the noisy voices, fogy eyes, and the cowering stance of the Copperhead.——Senate Flag.
