

A Repentant Rebel on Slavery.

An ex-slaveholder of Kentucky, named T. P. Atticus Bibb, writes to the Louisville Journal from Richmond (Va), under date of July 14th:

My poverty prevents me from returning to Kentucky, and as I cannot therefore renounce on the "stump" in that State all those political dogmas for which I was notorious wherever known, I beg to be allowed to do so through the columns of your valuable and widely disseminated journal.

I feel that I ought to do so, and with the hope of doing good, both to the State and National Government, I propose to occupy a few squares in the columns of your paper.

St. Paul was cured of his Phariseism by being felled to the earth and seeing a light from heaven. St. Peter could not understand that the new Covenant of Grace was intended for the Gentiles until, God, in the vision of the white sheet, knelt at the four corners, let down from heaven before him, full of all manner of four-footed beasts, told him to slay and eat; that what God had "cleansed" was not "common or unclean."

Without pretending to compare myself with either of the great Apostles, except in the obstinate persistence and enthusiasm with which I long adhered to the erroneous teachings of my youth, I may be allowed to say that after four years war, during all of which time I have been in the South, I am now thoroughly convinced that "State sovereignty," "slavery," "compact of States," "nullification," and the whole Southern theory of the Government was all wrong; and, having agitated and disturbed the country from its foundation, especially and particularly for the last thirty years, that I now consider them all as finally and forever settled, and the supremacy of the National Government finally established.

Even the South, as the South, is now, moreover, from observation other than the war, thoroughly convinced that the dogmas of the South were wrong and impracticable, and that the Federal theory of the Government is right.

That was Washington's idea, and the doctrine of all the patriots of the Revolution and of the country. Slavery must reside somewhere. In the body politic as in the natural body one hand must control and all the rest of the members must obey. It will not do for the eye, or foot, or hand to claim pre-eminence each for itself, and thus, under and retard the movements of the body; nor will it do for each State to say, "I am sovereign," but the whole "flourish together" and governed by one hand leads the nation.

"I see," as St. Paul says, "saw through a glass darkly, but now face to face." The sun have fallen from my eyes, and I discern that the nation was not a compact of States, but that the Constitution was made by the "people of the United States." All the powers the States have are given merely for convenience and police purposes and to divide the labors of government but would otherwise become cumbersome and inconvenient.

I look to Kentucky to bear her part in the grand movement of the age. Her voice has ever been potent for the Union, and she has ever been a "bright particular star" in the galaxy of States. I hope she will not obstinately cling to exploded errors and extinct institutions.

Here in Virginia, the great slave breed of the South—in Richmond, the great slave market of the South—in full view of the statues of Washington, Henry, Mason and Jefferson, I cheerfully bow to the "invariable logic of events," and hope that St. Paul and St. Peter, though long obstinate in their errors, were afterward permitted to become useful in propagating correct doctrine, the balance of my life, too, may be useful to my country in the zealous and faithful maintenance of the sound theory of the Union, the Constitution, and law.

What I have written is written from a deep sense of duty to myself and to my country. I have been thoroughly convinced of the subjects alluded to, and I felt that a communication of my former opinions should be as public as my admission to them had been, in the hope that perhaps some good might be effected.

Excuse.—We understand the Union ticket in Siskiyou county, California, was voted throughout.

Recovered.—The Post Office has been removed from the Haines building to the City Drug Store, with J. M. Sutton as Postmaster.

CURE FOR THE SMALL POX.—The following prescription is vouchered for by the Eastport, Maine, Sentinel, as a cure for the small-pox. It is worth trying:

"Give to the patient two tablespoonfuls of a mixture of hop yeast and water sweetened with molasses so as to be palatable, equal parts of each three times a day. Diet—boiled rice and milk, and toasted bread moistened with water, and without butter. Eat no meat. Give catnip tea as often as the patient is thirsty. Give physic when necessary. If the above treatment is strictly followed no marks of small pox will then remain."

UNGRATEFUL.—The Oregonian insists that the steamer Brother Jonathan was ungrateful and that it may be said that she was quite seriously injured by her collision with a vessel in the Columbia river but a few days before, and that when she started on her last trip, sufficient time had not elapsed to have had her thoroughly repaired.

STRANGE PASSING STRANGE.—An event occurred the past week, never before known in Jacksonville. For several days during the past week there was not a lawyer in town. However, O Jacobs, Esq., can now be found at his office, ready to attend to any disputes which may arise.

PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.—We are indebted to Senator Williams for valuable public documents, and also the July number of the Philosophical Journal, containing biographical sketches of President Johnson and Secretary Harlan.
