Not that Congress has ever denied such right to the States that continue to fulfill their constitutional obligations, but that the question may not enter into the national platform in any ambiguous or equivocal shape; and that it may be left for settlement by those who have the right to control it. Our own opinion on this question scarcely needs reiteration. The forcing of negro suffrage on the South, we recognize as an imperative necessity, just as much so as was the enlistment of black troops during the progress of the rebellion. We have expressed the opinion that those who voluntarily stepped forward to assist the Government, no matter how black they were, were betthrough the dim aisles of Time, aye, ter entitled to exercise the elective tranchise than those who sought to destroy it; but an absolute necessity not existing, we would have preferred that the unintelligent negroes who had not served in the army, had not been granted the privilege. We have always contended that there was too much suffrage-not too little; and can not help thinking that intelligence alone should be the only qualification, sirable spot on the face of all the applied alike to all, except those who are barred by paganism from becoming part of a great Christian Republic,

We do not force our views on the that Mr. U. S. WASHINGTON, D. C., 4th Feb'y, 1868.

Senator Williams has just finished one of the ablest speeches on Recon- from Maryland, and asked that he be struction that has ever been made in the Senate on the subject. He proves conclusively that the rebel States for- Mr. Sumner rose and offered a resolufeited their rights under the Constitution when they combined to destroy the Constitution. He read the resolution of July 1, 1864, declaring that of Maryland is republican in form suf these States were incapable of exercising functions as such in the Union, and he showed that Senators Doolittle and Hendricks voted for this resolution; and Mr. Williams also showed that Messrs. Hendricks and Buckalew voted for the resolution of Feb. 8th, 1865, excluding the rebel States from partieipating in the electoral votes for President and Vice President. He showed the Republican party stood upon the same ground now that they did in '64 and '65, and that these leaders of the Democratic party had changed.

Messrs Hendricks and Buckalew were both present, and they admitted they had voted for these measures; that the resolution and act in question was only declaratory, and they had voted for them under the peculiar circumstances of the times to preserve order in Congress, believing that in their condition the electoral votes of those States ought not to be counted so as to influence the result of the Presidential election.

Mr. Williams replied he was not concerned with reasons influencing Senators to vote upon legal constructions of the Constitution of the United States. He then proceeded to show that the Supreme Court had no right to deny the power of Congress to declare these States in insurrection, which deelaration had never been withdrawn by Congress, except as to Tennessee.

He quoted two cases decided by the Supreme Court, showing that Congress was the sole judge of the situation, and that the Southern States were public enemies; that no limitation exsted upon the power of the conqueror over the conquered belligerents, save that of clemency. All the Departon Johnson's declaration, "that at the close of the war there were no civil governments in the South;" that the Democracy had endorsed Johnson, and they were now estopped from denying was the war-making power, and no peace could be made without the con-sent of the Senate. Mr. Johnson by his proclamations had distranchised hundreds and thousands in the South after the surrender of Lee, and all the organized armies of the South. If it was constitutional for him to disfranchise, it certainly was constitutional for Congress to enfranchise. The followers, the Demo

The resolutions adopted in Congress on the 3d inst., by thirty-four majority, declaring that it is not expedient to grant any further railroad subsidies, is a heavy, and perhaps a finishing blow, for the present, to the Northern Pacific and the various branch railroads which have been projected, and for which Government aid has been sought. We anticipated this result, knowing that, owing to the present state of the national finances, there was a strong opposition in many parts of the country to any further grants of the kind .- Or-

2d. They will raise the question whether Senators from twenty-seven States constitute the Senate of the United States; they will maintain that until all the States are represented in the Senate and House, the former body is not competent to try the question of impeaching the President.

Failing in both of these, the President will firmly refuse to proceed with the trial, asserting that in such a case justice cannot be done. Then he will rise and send in his resignation, and appeal directly to the people to sustain him and pass judgment at the ballot box against the Senate. The story meets with some credence, and among Republicans is regarded as a shrewd attempt on the part of the President to force himself upon the Democratic party as their candidate.

There are many rumors affoat to-day to the effect that the President intends to use very bold means to obtain possession of the War Office.

Times' special says the Reconstruc tion Committee will to-morrow report a bill for the admission of Alabama under the Constitution, recently voted on by the people.

The Republican's special says that the friends of the President are boasting that he has concerted a plan whereby he will out-flank Congress in the matter of impeachment. They are eareful not to disclose it; but they state it will be developed next Friday when court meets. The Radicals bave carried the municipal elections in Nushville and Memphis. Jerry Black, Stansbury, and Benj. Curtis, of Maryland, have been positively determined on as the President's counsel.
