Saint Jonathan.
 BY JOHN G. SAGE.
 There's many an excellent Saint:
 St. George with his dragon and lance;
 St. Patrick, so jolly and quaint;
 St. Vitus, the saint of the dance;
 St. Dennis, the saint of the Gaul;
 St. Andrew, the saint of the Scot;
 But JONATHAN, youngest of all,
 Is the mightiest saint of the lot!

He wears a most serious face,
 Well worthy a martyr's possessing;
 But it isn't all owing to grace,
 But partly to thinking and guessing;
 In south, our American Saint
 Has rather a secular bias,
 And I never have heard a complaint
 Of his being excessively pious!

He's fond of financial improvement,
 And is always extremely inclined
 To be starting some practical movement
 For mending the morals and mind.
 Do you ask me what wondrous labors
 St. JONATHAN ever has done?
 To rank with his Calendar neighbors?
 Just listen, a moment, to one:

One day when a flash in the air
 Split his meeting-house fairly asunder,
 Quoth JONATHAN, "Now—I declare—
 'They're dreadfully careless with thunder!'"
 So he fastened a rod to the steeple,
 And now, when the lightning comes 'round
 He keeps it from building and people,
 By running it into the ground!

Re-acting, with pleasant emotion,
 On the capital job he had done—
 Quoth JONATHAN, "I have a notion
 Improvements have but just begun;
 If nothing's created in vain—
 As ministers often inform us—
 The lightning that's wasted, 'tis plain,
 Is really something enormous!"

While cyphering over the thing,
 At length he discovered a plan
 To catch the Electrical King,
 And make him the servant of man!
 And now, in an ord-ry way,
 He flies on the fleetest of pinions,
 And carries the news of the day
 All over his master's dominions!

One morning, while taking a stroll,
 He heard a lagularious cry—
 Like the shriek of a suffering soul—
 In a Hospital standing near by;
 A man such a terrible groan
 Saluted St. Jonathan's ear.
 That his bosom—which wasn't of stone—
 Was melted with pity to hear.

That night he invented a charm
 So potent that folks who employed it,
 In losing a leg or an arm,
 Don't suffer—but rather enjoy it!
 A miracle you must allow,
 As good as the best of his brothers—
 And blessed St. Jonathan now
 Is patron of cripples and mothers.

There's many an excellent Saint:
 St. George with his dragon and lance;
 St. Patrick, so jolly and quaint;
 St. Vitus, the saint of the dance;
 St. Dennis, the saint of the Gaul;
 St. Andrew, the saint of the Scot;
 But JONATHAN, youngest of all,
 Is the mightiest saint of the lot!

LETTER FROM B. F. DOWELL.
 WASHINGTON, D. C., }
 27th Feb'y 1868. }
THE IMPEACHMENT RESOLUTIONS
 Passed the House by a strict party vote of 126 to 47. Mr. Boutwell was next to the last who spoke in favor of impeachment. It was one of his happiest efforts. He in substance charged that the President was guilty, first, of violating the Constitution and the oath of the office by which he pledged himself to sustain the Constitution; and, second, that he was guilty of violating the tenure-of-office law in the removal of the Secretary of War without asking the advice and consent of the Senate. He held that he was guilty of the latter offence, whether the law itself was or was not constitutional. In reference to Mr. CARY's suggestion to refer the matter to the Supreme Court, he said that there were 54 Senators, and that the judgment of 36 of them must be in favor of the constitutionality of the tenure-of-office law. The Senate was, for this purpose, the highest judicial tribunal of the land; and he not only held that there was no reason or right for the assumption that the Senate should take the judgment of the Supreme Court or of any other court; but he held that it was the duty of every court, the Supreme Court as well as any other, to accept the judicial decision of the Senate as to whether that law is constitutional or not. This man, Andrew Johnson, imitating Sylla, who subverted the Roman Republic through the corruptions of the army; imitating Louis Napoleon, who trampled a republic under his feet and raised an empire on its ruin through the corruption which he introduced into the army—had also tried to seduce the army. But it was the most glorious, ennobling, heart-cheering evidence of the present generation that three leaders at least in the great contest for liberty (Grant, Sherman, and George H. Thomas) had spurned the inducements of power, had defied, under the law, the attempt to corrupt their minds and to alienate them from the country; and had rebuked, as words could not rebuke, the assumption of the gentleman from New York, (Mr. Brooks,) that three-fourths of the army were with the enemies of the country. What was the history of this man, Andrew Johnson? Was not he the man who, by his conduct on the 4th of March, 1865, brought disgrace and humiliation on the American people? Was not he the man who, by his machinations, had kept ten States out of the Union? Was not he the man who used his power as Chief Magistrate to delay the collection of the public revenue, and had restored to railroad companies in the South property which was in the hands of the Government, appropriating a portion of the money to his personal use? Was not he the man who would be, in the public judgment, condemned as the greatest usurper of modern times? The plot, of which the removal of Mr. Stanton was the outgrowth, was this: The President desired to get control of the War Department, in order, as in 1861, that the munitions of war, the army, the materials, might be used for the purpose of enabling him to succeed in his aspirations to be the next President of the United States. He knew that if he could corrupt the leaders of the army, if he could bend them to his will, he would have the Southern States in his control, and could send to the Democratic Convention, on the 4th of July next, men who would support his claim for the Presidency, on the allegation, which he could well carry out, and which no other man could make good, that with the army, and with his influence among the leaders of the South, he could secure the electoral vote of those ten States by excluding the negroes from all participation in the election. If, perchance, this man could get sufficient votes in the North to elect him, when added to the votes of the ten Southern States, then he had determined, with the support of the army, to be inaugurated President at the hazard of a civil war. It was this day that the country escaped from those evils. Of all the army but one man had been found to obey his will, and he—old, impotent, and weak—the object of sympathy and compassion rather than of hatred and revenge. This day, said he, in conclusion, the country is safe. Though there may be a momentary excitement; though pecuniary interests may, for a brief moment, suffer—as sometimes the sun sets behind dark clouds in the west, and the thunder alarms the timid, and the lightning affrights the fearful, it rises next morning with celestial beauty. So it will be if we now do our duty. Remove this man from the office he holds, redeem the Republic, and set an example to all posterity, which it will gladly imitate it, unhappily, like circumstances shall again arise, and to posterity and to history we may safely appeal. The people of the country are wedded to justice. They believe in duty. I know that this people, who furnished two and a half millions of men for the suppression of the rebellion; who passed safely through the crisis of the murder of a beloved Chief Magistrate, can now, with constitutional hands, lay hold upon the usurper of the laws and on the violator of the Constitution—on a man who breaks oaths. Remove him from the office he holds; preserve the Constitution unimpaired, and the nation will again, through these instrumentalities, be advanced higher and higher among the peoples of the earth. [A hum of applause went through the audience on the floor and in the galleries.]

Mr. Mallory's speech on impeachment is able and argumentative. We will publish it as soon as practicable, so all the readers of the SENTINEL can read it for themselves. He takes strong and high grounds in favor of impeachment. All should read it.
 General Grant's telegrams to General Pope and General Meade, about Alabama, were submitted to the House yesterday. They explain themselves. They are in these words:

WASHINGTON, August 3, 1867.
 To Major General Pope: I think your views sound, both in the construction which you give to the laws of Congress and the duties of the supporters of good government to see that when reconstruction is effected no loophole is left open to give trouble and embarrassment hereafter. It is certainly the duty of the district commanders to study what the framers of the reconstruction laws wanted to express as much as what they do express, and to execute the law according to that interpretation. This, I believe, they have generally done, and so far have the approval of all who approve the Congressional plan of reconstruction.
 U. S. GRANT, General.

On the 23d of December last, General Grant telegraphed General Pope as follows:
 The constitutions adopted by the conventions now in session are not the law of the States until submitted to the people and ratified by them. I do not see, therefore, how you can enforce laws enacted by them until so ratified.

General Grant, on the 10th of January, telegraphed General Meade, approving the latter's conduct in removing the State Treasurer of Georgia for not obeying the orders of the convention. Also, the following:
 I would not advise interference with the elections ordered by the Atlanta convention, unless very satisfactory reasons exist for doing so. As district commander, you will be perfectly justifiable in adopting as your own order the stay laws proposed in the constitution to be submitted to the people of Alabama and Georgia.

A sensational letter was read in the House this evening, from the Superintendent of the police of New York to the police of Washington, which caused considerable excitement in the House and the city. A double guard was placed in the capital last night, and it will be continued to-night. The letter is as follows:

OFFICE Supt. of the METROPOLITAN POLICE, No. 300 MILBERRY STREET, NEW YORK, FEB. 26, '68.
 Major A. C. Richards, Superintendent Metropolitan Police, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have just been called on by Colonel Tal. P. Shaffner, President of the U. S. Blasting Oil Company, with a request to look up five cans of nitroglycerine, which was delivered on an order from a regular customer, but which order is now pronounced to be a forgery. The quantity of the oil in the cans was about 165 pounds—a quantity sufficient to blow up the St. Nicholas Hotel, in New York.
 He fears that it may have been obtained in the way it was for some foul purpose, as he latterly has had several applications by unknown persons for the purchase of the article, to whom he refused to sell, owing to their being strangers, and would not explain satisfactorily the purpose for which they wanted it.

He informs me that, although it is given out that the stone walls of the Clerkenwell prison were blown down with gun-powder, the material used was nitroglycerine.
 Now sir, this 165 pounds have disappeared from New York, and if intended for mischief, it is more likely for use in Washington than elsewhere. I give you this information to put you on guard.

Very respectfully,
 JOHN A. KENEDY,
 Superintendent.
 Whether it was to be considered a "sell" or not, it was generally remarked that the seats on the Democratic side had been vacated as though the Democrats really had serious apprehensions of a Guy Fawkes plot.

TREASON IS NOT ODIOS.
 In the South. Senator Corbett has just received the following letter from a distinguished officer of the U. S. Army, who is well known in Oregon to be a man of truth and veracity. Here is the letter, read it:

AUGUSTA, GEORGIA, FEB. 23d, '68.
 Hon. H. W. Corbett, U. S. Senator,
 Sir: Upon the receipt of the news of the late attempt of the President to remove Secretary Stanton, intense excitement prevailed in this city. I do not think there can be any doubt that in case of a forcible conflict between the Executive and Congress, upon this, or any other issue, the Southern people would rise as one man.

* * * * * The freeman of this city paraded yesterday; one of the engines was surmounted with a silken banner with "Jefferson Davis," in gilt letters upon it. Treason is not odious here. A fellow calling himself Sergeant Bates is enroute from Vicksburg to Washington, carrying a U. S. flag, upon a wager that he will perform this journey without being insulted and without it costing him a cent. Thus far he has been received with marked attention at every important point. Do the enemies of truth expect to use this fact to disprove the charge of the total disloyalty of the Southern? I hope not, for it is no test. The notariety of the thing, and the fact that it will be used as a test, protect the man. If the terms of this wager had not been heralded over the whole country, he would have lost his wager before he had gone twenty miles. I understand they will receive him with honor here. Well, how hypocritical that will be, you can judge when I tell you that I am insulted daily because of my uniform, and because of the flag I hang out of my office window. I have repeatedly seen women walk in the middle of the street rather than pass under the flag. * * *

Don't think of reducing the Regular Army. I repeat, from a knowledge of the fact, the country needs every soldier it has got. Is not prevention better than cure? * * *

SENATOR CORBETT'S RECEPTION.
 In the midst of impeachment, and nitro-glycerine plots, I pause to notice the reception of Senator Corbett. On Monday night his spacious parlors were crowded from nine to twelve o'clock, with the elite of the city. Nearly all the Oregonians and Californians who are in the city, and many others attended. Senator Williams of Oregon, and his lady, Judge Lauder and Judge Oliphant, of Washington Territory, Representative Higby and Senators Conness and Cole, Gen. Sutter, General Butler and his family, Senator Frelinghuysen, and Speaker Colfax were among the number. The company was received by Senator Corbett, Mrs. Corbett, and Miss Ruckles, a sister of Mrs. Corbett. Each and all were cordially received, and the company appeared as familiar and as much at home as they would have been at a little family party in Jacksonville or Portland.

HOW TO HAVE A LOVING WIFE.—A correspondent sends the following to the Phrenological Journal:
 If you would have a loving wife, be as gentle in your words after as before marriage; treat her quite as tenderly when a matron as when a miss; don't make her the maid of all work and ask her why she looks less tidy and neat than when "you first knew her;" don't buy cheap, tough beef, and scold her because it does not come on the table "porter house;" don't grumble about squalling babies if you cannot keep up a "nursery;" and remember that "baby may take after papa" in his disposition; don't smoke and chew tobacco, and thus shatter your nerves, and spoil your temper, and make your breath a nuisance, and then complain that your wife declines to kiss you; go home joyous and cheerful to your wife and tell her the good news you have heard, and not silently put on your hat and go out to the "club" or "lodge," and let her afterwards learn that you spent the evening at the opera or at a fancy ball with Mrs. Daab. Love your wife; be patient; remember you are not perfect, but try to be; let whiskey, tobacco and vulgar company alone; spend your evenings with your wife, and live a decent, Christian life, and your wife will be loving and true—if you did not marry a heartless beauty without sense or worth; if you did, who is to blame if you suffer the consequences?

The steel pen manufactories of Birmingham employ 320 men and 2,000 women. They turn out weekly 98,000 gross of pens, in which 10 tons of steel, valued at $15,000, is used.

Good.—Jeff. Davis' Executive Mansion, at Richmond, is to be changed into a Freedmen's School House.
