No More.

Many years ago I've wandered Where the laughing brooklets flow: I've gathered flowers and squandered Beneath the sunbeam's glow. My flowers were a token Of happy days of old. When my gloomy fancies were broken By sweet pleasure's joyous fold. Then again I stand in sorrow, Listening to the water's roar, Wishing for those happy hours, But the sounds reply "no more."

Oh, what bright and joyful hours! What happy times my heart then read! Where those gay and fragrant flowers Hung in beauty o'er my head. Then I knew but joy and gladness, Then my heart was young and light. But those times have changed to sadness, And the day to dismal night. Now I sit beneath the willow As I did in days of yore, Wishing for those happy moments, But the winds reply "no more!"

Two years ago, those hours so cheery, Crowned my heart with pleasure's wreath. But they've passed, and I am woe, While beside this flowery mead. Thus it is with hours of childhood, Happy hours, so bright and gay; They, like flowers of the wildwood, Bloom awhile, then pass away. And when gone, in grievous accents Their return we then implore; But Time, on its pinions softly Echoes back, "no more, no more!"

Speech of Edwin M. Stanton.

We give below an extract from an eloquent speech delivered on the 25th, of September, by Hon. Edwin M. Stanton, at an immense Republican gathering at Steubenville, Ohio:

"Grant stands this day before us the foremost military commander in the world, with peace for his watchword. Why should he not be elected? What reason has any lover of his country for not voting for him? By his side stands Schuyler Colfax, who, by his own energy, good character and industry, advanced from the printing office to the Speaker's Chair, and for three successive terms has filled that office with honor and distinction. Honest and upright men have been nominated for our representatives in Congress, pledged to stand by Grant and the country; why then, again, I ask, should he and they not receive your support? The history of Grant is known to you and to the whole world. Educated at West Point, he served with distinction through the Mexican war, and when it was ended, unwilling to be a drone, resigned his commission and engaged in the pursuits of civil life. Leaving his peaceful pursuits at the commencement of the rebellion, he joined the army, and soon advanced to the rank of Major-General, commanding an army. After varied and important services, he moved upon the enemies works at Donelson, and compelled their commander, Buckner, to surrender with 18,000 prisoners of war. Soon after he grappled with Beauregard on the field of Shiloh, and drove him and routed his army from the field. Resolved to open the navigation of the Mississippi river he ran his batteries and defeated General Johnston, chased the rebel General Pemberton into Vicksburg, and forced him to surrender with 30,000 prisoners of war. Advanced to command all the West he fought and defeated Bragg at Chattanooga, shattered his army, and delivered that vast territory from the hands of the rebels. Advanced still higher as Lieutenant-General, he changed his headquarters to the Potomac. Forty days marching and fighting through the wilderness, drove Lee and his army into Richmond. Compelled to evacuate, Lee was chased to Appomattox Court House and forced to surrender himself, and his arms and men as prisoners of war, which practically brought the rebellion to an end. And now I ask what reason has any man to vote against General Grant? His capacity and integrity for civil administration was equally manifest in that vast territory in which he operated. If any man among you would hide from the boy the musket, knapsack that his father carried at Donaldson, Vicksburg, upon Lookout Mountain, through the Wilderness, before Richmond, at Five Forks, at Appomattox Court House, and shouldering proudly, and marches with 200,000 of his fellow sol-

The Great Tidal Wave.

The great tidal wave that swept over the New York Rebel Convention and caught up Seymour with such irresistible force was in reality nothing but the ebbing tide of the rebellion—the expiring struggle of the treacherous Democracy to regain the lost cause, by regaining lost power: The conduct of that Convention, its platform and nominees has alarmed the friends of peace, of freedom and of national honor, and caused the swelling tide of patriotic devotion to the Government of Washington and the cause of human rights, that is sweeping on with irresistible force, and its proud wave will not be stayed until the last rebel and sympathizer with treason shall be made to know and feel that God is supreme, and that freedom and justice is the law of the land and the only foundation upon which Government can be securely based and made to stand the test of time and enlightened reason.

"Coming events cast their shadows before." There is no longer any reason to doubt that Grant and Colfax will be the next President and Vice President of the United States—that the late State elections foreshadow the result, and that then will come a time of peace and prosperity to the nation and people, such as has not hitherto been known in the history of any nation. "Let us have peace," is the response of every patriotic and Christian heart, to that noble utterance of Grant, our great Captain and standard-bearer. Vermont, Maine, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Nebraska, New Mexico, Colorado and Dakota have all responded in thunder tones for Grant and peace. The whole nation is alive to the importance of the present struggle, which is nothing less than the issues involved in the late rebellion—freedom, peace and Union on the one side, and disunion, war and slavery on the other.

The Union Republican party presents freedom, peace and Union. It was for that that it fought and conquered the late Democratic rebellion. The Democratic party represents disunion, war and slavery. It was for that it rebelled and plunged the nation into civil war, and now seeks to regain the lost cause. The great contest between these parties for power to control the nation will be submitted to the decision of the people on the 3d day of November next. We cannot doubt the result. We have faith in the virtue and intelligence of the people to work out for Union, freedom, justice and humanity a decisive victory in the election of Grant and Colfax, and so believing we shall continue to work for that end until November's sun goes down on election day. We hope the friends of God and humanity will do likewise.—Stars and Stripes.

The Wasted Flowers.

On the velvet banks of a rivulet, sat a rosy child. Her lap was filled with flowers, and a garland of rosebuds were twined around her neck. Her face was as radiant as the sunshine that fell upon it; and her voice was as clear as that of the birds that warbled at her side. The little stream went singing on, and with each gush of its music the child lifted a flower in its dimpled hand with a merry laugh, threw it upon its surface. In her glee, she forgot that her treasures were growing less, and with the swift motion of childhood, she flung them upon the sparkling tide, until every bud and blossom had disappeared. Then seeing her loss, she sprung upon her feet and burst into tears, crying aloud to the stream "Bring back my flowers!" But the stream danced along regardless of her tears; and as it bore the blossoming burden away, her words came back in a taunting echo along its reedy margin. And, long after, amid the wailing of the breeze, and the fitful burst of childish grief, was heard the fruitless cry "Bring back my flowers!" Merry maiden! who art idly wasting the precious moments so bountifully bestowed upon thee, observe in this thoughtless child an emblem of thyself. Each moment is a perfumed flower. Let its fragrance be dispensed in blessing all around thee, and ascend as sweet incense to its benevolent Giver. Else when thou hast carelessly flung them from thee, and seest them receding on the swift waters of Time, thou wilt cry in tones more sorrowful than those of the child—"Bring back my flowers!" And the only answer will be an echo from the shadowy past—"Bring back my flowers!"

Turkey-ing.

In former days there dwelt in the brave Corneracker State, in close proximity to each other, a young, buxom, and wealthy widow and a bachelor of scarcely more than her own age. Both had inherited their property, and were comparatively strangers to each other. But their plantations joined, and many were the acts of neighborly kindnesses that passed between them. Well, as somebody sang to the witching widow Machree, the time arrived when the "birds go in pairs," and the widow found that although she had plenty of hen turkeys she had none of the other persuasion, they having mysteriously disappeared. But she knew that her neighbor had plenty of a rare breed, and so sent Sambo over to borrow a couple. In due time he came back with a large gobbler under each arm and a broad grin upon his face. "Well?" asked his mistress. "Massa said," was the answer, "dat he send dem turkeys, and dat if dey didn't answer he'd just come ober and gobble his own self." "Go back and tell him to come," commanded the widow with cheeks like peonies. The negro did as he was commanded—the horse of the bachelor was hitched that night until a late hour at the post in front of the widow's door—and there was a wedding within three months.

Southern Railroad Connection.

CHARLESTON, Sept. 7th, 1868.

EDITORS OF RAILROAD RECORD.—Gentlemen: Knowing the interest which your valuable Journal has always taken in the Blue Ridge Railroad, I sent you, last week, the message of Governor Scott to the Legislature in relation to it, and his recommendations as to the early resumption, and final completion of the work. A Bill is ready before that body embodying his recommendation, and its early passage is expected.

While writing to you I will call your attention to an article in the RECORD of the 30th April last, which does our city great injustice, and which it seems to me that you should correct. In the article referred to, headed "The Southside Consolidated Act," in giving the depths of water in the channels of approach to the principal ports of the Atlantic and Gulf Cities, at high tide, Charleston is put down at fifteen (15) feet, whereas it is very common for vessels drawing sixteen and a half feet, to seventeen feet, to load at our docks, and to cross our bar without difficulty. Indeed, the British barque Annie Kimball, with railroad iron, crossed our bar in the summer of 1867, drawing eighteen feet nine and a half inches (18.94) feet, whereas it is very common for vessels drawing sixteen and a half feet, to seventeen feet, to load at our docks, and to cross our bar without difficulty. This channel has now so shallowled that it is no longer used by any but vessels of light draft; but the channel immediately north of it, known as Pumpkin Hill, has been thereby greatly deepened, affording a depth of water much greater than we have ever had before, or of which there is any record.

In this connection it would be a great omission not to allude to Port Royal, for although no city or town now occupies its banks, yet railroads at no distant day will be constructed to its magnificent harbor, with its unusual depth of twenty-two feet (22) at low, and 28 feet at high water, always accessible and never blocked up with ice. Can it be possible that when the Southern Pacific Railroad shall be constructed, which it will be, and our own great section shall pour its growing wealth on our shores, requiring vessels and steamships of the largest size, to convey the productions of so extended a country to the distant markets of the world, that this magnificent harbor shall not be demanded for its accommodation? It seems to me that a look at the map settles this question, and the future of these things is not so distant that Port Royal should be overlooked.

I am gentleman, very respectfully,
Your obedient servant,
H. Goussard.
