Michael Reese's Death

NEW YORK, Aug. 27.—The Chronicle's Paris correspondent in a letter, received here to-day, gives the following additional particulars concerning the death of Michael Reese:

It seems, apparently to avoid paying the customary fee to the sexton, Mr. Reese got into the cemetery surreptitiously by climbing over the fence. After lingering at the graves of his parents for a while he climbed the fence again. This time he was discovered by the sexton, who, running up, seized Mr. Reese and demanded to know what he was doing in there. Reese denied that he had been in the cemetery. The sexton, who had seen Reese in the cemetery told him he was arrested and should be taken before the Burgomaster, and started off to town with him. Reese became greatly excited over the humiliating position in which he had placed himself, and got into a wordy wrangle with the indignant sexton, whose ire had been roused by Reese's attempt to evade paying him his fee. It was during this heated discussion that the emotions caused by unusual excitement sent the blood rushing to Mr. Reese's head, and while angrily expostulating with the man who had him under arrest, he fell dead.

The Yellow Fever Scourge.

This disease, instead of decreasing, is increasing at the South, and great distress is the result; but thanks to the good people of the North, and in Europe, relief is gradually coming in to alleviate the suffering as much as possible.

It appears that the recently telegraphed account of the tragic death of Aaron Burr's daughter, Mrs. Theodosia Burr Allston, is not so very new. Instead of the old sailor's confession having been recently made, it notes back to 1850, when an old man, an inmate of the Cass county poorhouse, Cassopolis, Mich., in conversing with a lady, the wife of a Methodist minister, about his past life, filled with wrong-doings and crime, said that the act which caused him the most remorse was the tipping of the plank on which Mrs. Allston, the daughter of Aaron Burr, walked into the ocean. Said he: "I was a sailor on a private vessel. We captured the vessel in which the lady was. When told she must walk the plank into the ocean, she asked for a few moments alone, which was granted. She came forward, when told her time had expired, dressed beautifully in white, the loveliest woman I had ever seen. Calmly she stepped upon the plank. With eyes raised to the heavens and hands crossed reverently upon her bosom, she walked slowly and firmly into the ocean without an apparent tremor. Had I refused to perform my work, as I wished with all my heart I had, my death would have been sure and certain."

The merchant princess and millionaires in New York and other Eastern cities are subscribing with an unexampled liberality to the fund for the relief of the yellow fever sufferers.
