A TERRIBLE ENCOUNTER.

I had been living in Oakland but a short time, and crossed the ferry every day to business in San Francisco. One evening I was watching from the ferryboat the lights of San Francisco receding in the distance, and was absorbed in the beauty of their dancing, flashing, many-colored rays.

I turned suddenly, and saw him for the first time—a tall, athletic man, his face covered with a long black beard, standing near and evidently watching me.

For some weeks I saw nothing of the man, and although I had ceased to think of him, I continued from habit to carry the pistol.

"My friend, do you know that your life is in danger on these streets at this hour of the night?" I had with me a considerable sum of money that had been handed to me in the evening, and which in my hurry I had forgotten to deposit in the safe.

Something told me I had not seen the last of the man, and I carefully examined my pistol every morning. I made cautious inquiries of the police but nothing was there known of such a person as I described.

"Aha!" he exclaimed, "I had no idea of taking a life over here. But I am always ready for business. Excuse me sir, he continued with a fiendish smile, 'do you realize that you have not long to live?'

BILL TO RESTRICT IMMIGRATION OF CHINESE TO THE UNITED STATES.

WASHINGTON, February 16.—Following is the full text of the bill to restrict immigration of Chinese to the United States, as it passed the Senate on the 15th.

Sec. 2. That whenever the master or other person in charge of any such vessel takes on board the same at any foreign port or place any greater number of Chinese passengers than is prescribed in the first section of this Act, with intent to bring such passengers to the United States, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, for each passenger so taken on board and brought within the jurisdiction of the United States, exceeding the number of fifteen, be fined one hundred dollars and may also be imprisoned for not exceeding six months.

"SUICIDE AT SAUCILITO.—Yesterday afternoon the body of M. P. M. Dodge was found in the woods at Sauciloto. He had shot himself through the brain, and the pistol with which he committed the act was still firmly clutched in his hand.

PORTLAND, Feb. 14, 1879. TO THE EDITOR OF THE STATESMAN: The Dowell-Griswold case was up again yesterday before the U. S. Commissioner and from present appearances the case may be summed up as follows:

A bill will be filed in behalf of the United States and B. F. Dowell to-day in the United States Circuit Court to declare W. C. Griswold insolvent according to section 2466 of the revised statute of the United States, which states gives the United States priority in all cases of insolvency.

"Better call her a woman," said Judge Kelsey to a lawyer in Corvallis, who was talking about a lady the other day; "God made women, but a lady is only a modern fixture in fine dress."

SHALL OR WILL.

BIG BUTTE, FEB. 10th, 1879. EDITOR SENTINEL:—Can you give a rule through your paper by which one can determine the proper construction at all times of the auxiliaries, "shall and will," when the nominative is of the first person which would be correct, and why, to say "I shall go to town" or to say "I will go to town."

Having received a communication from a subscriber requesting us to give a rule of grammar by which one may, at all times, be guided in the correct use of the verbs "shall" and "will" when the subject has the property of first person, we will say that in reply, that custom has made these verbs so freely interchangeable that no absolute rule for their use can be given.

Sec. 3. That the master of any vessel arriving in the United States, or of any of the Territories thereof, from any foreign place whatever, at the same time that he delivers a manifest of the cargo, and if thereby no cargo, then at the time of making report or entry of the vessel, pursuant to law, shall, in addition to the other matters required to be reported by law, deliver and report to the Collector of the district in which such vessel shall arrive, a separate list of all Chinese passengers taken on board the vessel at that time. Such list shall be sworn to by the master in the same manner as directed by law in relation to the manifest of cargo, and refusal or neglect to report and deliver a manifest of the cargo.

Sec. 4. That the amount of the several penalties imposed by the foregoing provisions shall be liens on the vessels violating those provisions, and such vessels shall be libelled therefor in any Circuit or District Court of the United States, where such vessel shall arrive.

Sec. 6. That this Act shall not apply to persons officially connected with the Chinese Government, or any Embassy thereof, or to persons rescued from shipwreck during the voyage of and by the vessel seeking a harbor in stress of weather within the jurisdiction of the United, or to persons who may only seek a temporary residence for educational purposes and who shall have a certificate from the Chinese Government for that purpose.

Sec. 7. That this Act shall take effect from and after the first day of July, 1879, and the President of the United States shall immediately on the approval of this Act give notice to the Government of China of the abrogation of article five and six of the additional articles of the treaty of June 18th 1858, between the United States and China, proclaimed February 5, 1870, commonly called the Burlingame treaty.

A GLIMPSE OF TILDEN.

New York, January 5.— * * * * * Speaking of Mr. Tilden, I have had two recent occasions to see him on parade, as it were—one on a cold day when the streets of New York were full of snow. I saw him slowly walking down the rim of Madison Square, nearly opposite the Fifth Avenue Hotel. At that point was a dozen to twenty men lined up in line, and their drivers parading the pavement so as to pick up a customer. Mr. Tilden approached, wearing a black velvet sack coat, a high hat with a band of crape on it, and on his feet clashes or cloth and gum shoes, which assisted to point the toes toward each other as he generally walks. The old man walked along that pavement in a rather or brown study, quite weak at the knees, and with a lost look about the head and eyes, as if he had come out to walk without purpose or direction. He had passed the first two cabmen when it occurred to them to make a remark, intimating their knowledge of the great man's presence. He thereupon turned around and looked backward with the most pitiable and venerable expression, and took off his hat to each cabman in turn, uncovering his head and making a low bow. The joke—or respect, whichever it was—extended to all the cabmen he had not come up to, and these in succession took off their hats; and the little old man, with his lost, almost skinned look, uncovered to each in turn, until he got to be quite a scene, and people stood off to grin or wonder.

To-day I was going down Broadway and stopped at the corner of Union Square which is only about a quarter of a mile from Mr. Tilden's house on Gramercy Park. I saw the old man cross Broadway, wearing his same hat with crape band, and a suit of brown sleeve buttons that presented the appearance of an amputated arm. He had no cane, and walked forward with his toes pointed toward each other, and rather infirm legs, and an expression of countenance very little removed from imbecility. He appeared to be talking to himself, and when he got on the corner looked up and down the street, ahead and behind, as if he had forgotten which way he was going. He began to move his lips after he had hesitated a moment, as if he were reasoning out some problem of State, or had been quite overworked in mind by political calamities. I was in a store and looked out of the window and observed him without being seen. I don't think he would have seen me if he would have looked in the window. There was a vacancy in his own face quite noticeable. After a while he concluded to keep down the north side of Union Square, as if going toward his home. Several persons stopped and looked after him, and I came out of the store, and slowly followed at some distance behind.

Should have pretty teeth in them, but it is not unusual to see between rosy lips, teeth discolored and decaying through neglect. This disfiguring defect should be repaired without delay, by using fragrant SOZODONT, which removes every particle of tartar from the teeth and renders them snowy white. This admirable aid to beauty is perfectly harmless and exhales a most delightful aroma, and is in every respect preferable to the ordinary tooth pastes and powders. Try it and soo for yourself.

MINING DISCOVERY.

WARD AND JOHN GILDERSLEEVE returned the other day from a prospecting tour on Cow Creek, having been absent over two weeks. They brought back with them some fine specimens of gold-bearing quartz taken from a lead which they discovered. The quartz is now being assayed by S. W. Crane, of this city, and we trust it may prove as rich as is expected.—Star.
