KLAMATH BASIN.

The following prettily written article from "Wallace's Monthly," gives a good description of a section of country regarding which many of our readers will be glad to learn. The article is from the pen of Jay Beach, Esq., the owner of the famous trotter "Altamont," a fine engraving of whom appears in this number of our paper. Mr. Beach is paying particular attention to the raising of trotting horses of pure blood, and thinks he has found the "Arabia of America" away up in the delightful basin of Klamath, which nestles among the summits of the far-famed Cascade range of Oregon.

He says: "Fort Klamath, the present home of the writer, is a military garrison occupied by two companies of United States troops, and is cosily located at the north edge of Klamath basin, in Lake county. Klamath basin is a mountain valley in Southeastern Oregon, entirely surrounded by high mountains. It has an altitude of 4,500 feet above the sea-level, and an area of probably 750 square miles, one-half of which is Klamath lake, and the other half a magnificent prairie dotted with aspen and tamarack groves, and covered with a luxuriant growth of herbage unsurpassed in quality, even by the produce of Kentucky's boasted pastures.

The snows of winter are such that the range can only be utilized in summer, and even then the summer frosts permit only the growth of those grasses which are indigenous to the soil.

Our native horses, considering their origin and advantages, are surprisingly excellent—and what wonder! Cold mountain streams as clear and sparkling as crystal, slake their thirst, and the dry, bracing, rarefied air inhaled by them at every breath, must give them lung-power and elasticity not to be found among animals which have been reared in the humid atmosphere of lower altitudes. Could S. T. H.'s but feast his eyes upon the beauties of our little park, his facile pen would trace such a glowing description that even though it should preface a "horse-article," I think our brilliant "Yah Amerikanski" could endure it. Mounts Pitt and Shasta, with eternal snows, loom up grandly in our sight. Crater Lake, twenty two miles from here, is a walled or sunken lake exactly on the summit of the Cascades, and is one of the grandest and most awe-inspiring sights ever witnessed by mortal man.

Its walls are from one thousand to two thousand feet high, and the water's edge can only be reached at one point, where the descent must be carefully made. The lake is in dimension, about ten by fifteen miles; has been sounded to the depth of seven hundred feet, and in many places no bottom can be found. Near its centre is a small mountain island, in which is a deep conical hole or crater, which contains snow during the whole year. The presence of vast amounts of scoria and pumice covering the country for miles around, sufficiently attests the existence at one time of a mighty burning volcano. Snow is found on the banks of the lake at all seasons of the year. The water is perfectly transparent, and not a thing of life inhabits it. Klamath lake, however, and the several mountain streams which flow into it, contain myriads of golden, silver, lake and brook trout, that are capable of making a line spin out to the merriest music of the reel. Our sportsmen who find water fowl, prairie chickens and the different varieties of grouse in such abundance for their game-bags, and who sometimes take a hundred pounds of trout in a single day, (with fashionable tackle, too), read in the columns of Eastern sporting journals the long, prosy descriptions of abortive attempts, which the disciples of Nimrod and Walton are constantly making to bag a pheasant within gunshot of a farmer's door, or capture a "red-horse" in some quiet brook which irrigates a cow-pasture, with derisive smiles; and venture the assertion that should the aforesaid disciples ever act on H. G.'s advice, and get far enough West to 'set' a twelve pound trout, or caught a glimpse of a three-hundred pound buck, to say nothing of attempting to disturb the equanimity of a serene and 'level-headed' grizzly, they will never after waste paper, ink and time in the description of futile attempts upon the life of a poor robin or meadow lark. The historical "Lava Beds" too, are in this neighborhood; for it was here that Captain Jack and his three lieutenants were hung for the murder of Gen. Canby and Dr. Thomas, of the Peace Commission, and it was in this vicinity that the little band of eighty Modocs held an army of brave men at bay for six long months. The greater part of Klamath basin is an Indian reservation and the Klamaths, who are the principal occupants, are but one of the divisions of the Modocs—their language and customs being identical with those of that tribe. But to enumerate the many points of interest, among which are Rogue River Falls, the grand and picturesque walled canyon of Annie's Creek, and the valuable deposits of fossils in the desert east of us, would carry me too far from my theme.

Do my readers wonder that I have decided to engage in breeding trotters in this 'Arabia of America,' a question the soundness of a belief, that with the right kind of blood, there can be produced in a locality in which serious diseases of the horse are unknown, and at an altitude and in a climate in which the lungs must attain their greatest excellence, horses which will prove themselves the peers, and even the superiors of the greatest Eastern prodigies? Whether experience shall cool my ardor would now be a question of prophecy, and time must tell the story.

An act approved March 3, 1879, to provide additional regulations for homestead and pre-emption entries of public lands, omitting the enacting clause, reads as follows: That before final proof shall be submitted by any person claiming to enter agricultural lands under the laws providing for pre-emption or homestead entries, such person shall file with the register of the proper land-office a notice of his or her intention to make such proof, stating therein the description of lands to be entered, and the names of the witnesses by whom necessary facts shall be established. Upon the filing of such notice, the register shall publish a notice that such application has been made once a week for the period of thirty days, in a newspaper to be by him designated as published nearest to such notice, he shall also post such notice in some conspicuous place in his office for the same person. Such notice shall contain the names of the witnesses as stated in the application. At the expiration of said period of thirty days the claimant shall be entitled to make proof in the manner heretofore provided by law. The Secretary of the Interior shall make all necessary rules for giving effect to the foregoing provisions.

A young Jewish lady of a rich and respected family was recently on the point of being married near Cologne, in Germany, when a peasant woman entered and forbade the ceremony. She said that twenty years before she had been the nurse of the child now supposed to be the bride, but had accidentally rolled over upon it and smothered it while sleeping. Fearing punishment, she substituted her own infant, and allowed it subsequently to be taken from her. "Of course I am much obliged for the education and rearing the child has received," said the woman, "but you can understand that as a good Christian I could never allow my daughter to be married to a Jew."

Troy Dye, the boss murder manipulator of Sacramento, Cal., with his ingenuity to make the authorities believe he was insane by almost kicking his wife to death while visiting him in his cell the other day. A council of physicians examined him and have decided that he was sane. He was sentenced to be hung last Thursday, and we presume he is now fully dyed. The reason he was sentenced to be hung on Thursday, instead of the usual hangman's day (Friday), was that Judge Denson considered that it would have been a disgrace on the fair name of other criminals to have him play to a select audience on that day.

Rayburn was arrested, had a preliminary examination before W. H. Johnson, J. P., and was held to answer before the grand jury in $200 bonds, which were given and he was released from custody.

Edwin Booth is quoted as saying of his recent assailant that he is a "dangerous lunatic—nothing more."

A BRILLIANT SPEECH BY SENATOR BLAINE.

Several confederate democratic politicians have had the impudence to assert in the two houses of Congress that Daniel Webster in his closing years changed his views and held that the government was not national, but a compact between the states. On the 19th day of May Senator Blaine took up these assertions, and in a very able speech showed how the remarks of Webster had been perverted and misstated. A special to a Chicago paper gives these particulars:

Mr. Blaine began by adducing authorities setting at rest the position of Daniel Webster as to whether this is a nation or confederation of states. He quoted largely from the speeches and writings of Webster, and some of the utterances of that statesman he showed to be singularly appropriate to the present condition of things. Reading from one of Webster's speeches in the senate directed to the democratic side, he said he would adopt that language and apply it to-day after the lapse of forty years. He showed that the democratic party had learned nothing from that day to this and their states rights doctrine was a perpetual menace to the national authority and existence. He overhauled Alexander Stevens' book called the "War between the States;" while he gave Stevens' credit for sincerity, he lamented the mischievous tendency of the book. He denied that even the title was right; that the war was not between the States, but between a section of the country and the nation. He riddled some portions of Ben Hill's great speech and managed to place that senator in a very ridiculous position. Hill had said that he consented to secession as he would to the death of his father, because he could not help it. Blaine showed that Hill voted for the ordinance of secession, so that from his consent to the death of his father he had joined in with the mob to help kill the old man. Such was the logic of Hill's position. He passed in rapid review the speeches of Hill, Eaton, Bayard and Salsbury. There were several amusing passages between Blaine and Eaton, in which the Connecticut senator reiterated his former statement that he would not vote a dollar to the army until the President signed the democratic caucus bill. Blaine spoke for two hours and had the undivided attention of all present. Even Conkling laid aside his work, which has been known to be very pressing, when Blaine spoke, and listened to the entire speech. Blaine showed that all the confederate statesmen, instead of taking their quotations from Webster himself, had taken them at second-hand from Stevens' mischievous book, and Stevens, a known secessionist and ex-vice-president of the southern confederacy, is not an authority on Webster, the great champion of the national cause.

EXCITING SCENE.

About 2 o'clock, P. M., last Tuesday, says the Corvallis "Gazette," Sheriff Sol. King returned Frank Rayburn to the jail of this county and placed him in the large iron cell in the jail. Mr. King having been absent from home over a week, and anxious to see his family, was in the act of locking the cell, when J. W. Rayburn demanded an immediate interview with his brother, Frank. The Sheriff, for reasons above stated, declined, but said he would give him an opportunity after while or words to that effect. Shortly after this Mr. King and a large crowd of citizens were returning from the court house, Mr. R. among the number. While walking toward Mr. R.'s office he was very abusive of the Sheriff, and when near there Mr. King turned around to face his assailant when he found himself covered by a revolver in the hands of Rayburn. He immediately drew his own pistol, and at the same instant caught the pistol of Rayburn in his left hand, when the pistol snapped and was prevented from being discharged by catching upon his hand, between the thumb and forefinger. At this juncture a friend of Mr. Rayburn snatched King's pistol, but the Sheriff kept a death grasp on Rayburn's pistol and took it from him—no shot being fired. Had a pistol been discharged even accidentally, in the crowd, there is no telling what might have been the sad consequences.
