and Jackson counties and also Lake and part of Siskiyou county, I think it the duty of every man within reach of said proposed road to put his shoulder to the wheel, by going into his pocket at least a little. This enterprise is worthy of a united effort, for the reason that it will be an incalculable benefit to every one. By a little figuring we think we can show conclusively that all will be benefited by it. We will first mention the wool growers of Josephine and Jackson counties; they export over 400,000 pounds of wool annually by the way of Roseburg and Portland to San Francisco. This has to be shipped and reshipped and is carried 900 miles before reaching market at San Francisco. Now this wool can be taken to Crescent City as cheaply as it can to Roseburg and be shipped to San Francisco direct; that would reduce the distance to be carried to market to about 350 miles and no re-shipping. Thus it would seem to us that we ought to export our wool and other products to market at one-half of what it now costs. But it is safe to say, we can save twenty dollars per ton. This on wool alone would be a saving of $4,000 per annum.

But those sheep men are not all the people that would be benefited by a good wagon road to the coast. Every settler in this district of country would be benefited in proportion to his necessities. Every settler uses from 500 him a class of mules. Richard G. Rhodes of Chicago, the inventor, said that he had been deaf for a number of years, and that he discovered the principle of the audiphone by accident. One night, after making many fruitless experiments, with the view of finding some way of hearing his watch tick, he listlessly touched the case of the time piece to his teeth, and he was surprised to find that its ticking was distinctly audible to him. This discovery led to the invention of the audiphone.

The instrument has the shape and size of an ordinary stiff fan, and it may be used as such. It is made of a composition said to possess the property of gathering sounds and conveying the sensation to the auditory nerve through the medium of the teeth, the external ear having nothing to do with hearing in this manner. The material resembles gutta percha. Small cords running from the thin edges and converging at the handle, serve to bend the blade of the instrument to the proper curve for hearing to the best advantage under different conditions. When in use the edge of the thin curved blade is touched to one of the upper teeth.

The mutes tested the audiphone. A young man who had been deaf from infancy heard words spoken in the tones of ordinary conversation. A little girl who was born deaf indicated by signs
