GAMBLING IN THE ARMY. How the Statesmen at Washington Proposed to Suppress the Pernicious Practice.

There is a general impression at Washington that the soldiers in our frontier forts spend their spare time in gambling. Naturally, the Congressional mind is filled with horror at the thought that sinful games should be played by men in the service of the United States, and bills have been introduced by virtuous legislators to put a stop to the practice.

The president is understood to have been greatly pained on learning that the officers and men of the Federal Army are addicted to gambling, and the other day, just before the appointment of a new Secretary of War, he called a meeting of the Cabinet to discuss the propriety of requesting Mr. McCrary's successor to issue an order prohibiting gambling under heavy penalties.

Mr. Hayes opened the proceedings with a brief speech, in which, after a passing allusion to the crops of the past season, he said that he had learned that gambling prevailed to a very great extent among the troops on the frontier. This gambling, the President said, was carried on, not only in the usual way by pitching pennies and playing marbles to keep, but by a game of cards called, if he remembered rightly, "sledge-hammer," or "tongs."

With this game he was glad to say he was totally unacquainted, but he feared that there was no doubt that it was a wicked game, and one that was so fascinating that soldiers would frequently sell their Bibles and hymnbooks in order to raise money with which to play. He wished to hear the views of the Cabinet on this subject, and their opinion as to the expediency of an order from the department forbidding all games of chance.

Mr. Key, turned to the President. The games to which he had referred were doubtless "old sledge" and "poker." The former he was free to say was a game unworthy of officers and gentlemen, and as to poker he must confess that it was ruinous to both body and the pocket—he should say soul. "I remember," pursued Mr. Key, "that while I was an erring Confederate soldier we used to play poker every payday. I once raked in seventy-four thousand dollars in Confederate currency (it was worth about eight hundred dollars) in a single night. I just did hold the most alfred hands; there was twice I drew three kings and filled. I reckon I made about four times my pay by poker while I was in the army."

"Permit me to inquire," said Mr. Evarts, "if my learned friend alludes these facts as evidences of ruinous consequences of poker? If so, I will call attention to the fact that they go to prove that this so-called poker is one of the most profitable American industries."

"I cannot blay any of your poker," said Mr. Schurz, "but I know my piano is far better. I will play some things for you now if you like. But, so! gan I believe it! Is der biano away from der room gone?"

The President explained that Mrs. Hayes had moved the piano upstairs so as to make more room for the Cabinet meeting.

"It is curious," continued Mr. Schurz, "when I game to Washington there is a piano in every house to which I vent. Now every one has been upstairs taken. I cannot account for it. What is—"

"I reckon," broke in Mr. Thompson, without the slightest apology for his interruption of Mr. Schurz, "I reckon when I was a boy raftin' on the Washash, we used to play old sledge and the odd man for quarters all day long. One voyage I scooped the cabin and all hands, and come into New Orleans with all the money of the whole crowd in my pocket. But, as Mr. Hayes says, gamblin' is wrong, very wrong. Still there's this to be said for it: While the soldiers are playing poker they can't be readin' Popish books or listenin' to Jesuit priests, and there's no manner of doubt that Romanism is a sight worse than gambling. I'd like to see a general order requiring every soldier to make an affidavit once a month that he is a good Protestant, and is determined to fight the Pope to the last gasp."

The President here asked if Brother Thompson would kindly explain what he meant by a quarter of an odd man.

Mr. Thompson said he could illustrate what "going the odd man for quarters" meant very easily, if Mr. Hayes and Mr. Kee would each put a quarter of a dollar down on the table and cover it with their hands, while he did the same with another one. He then asked them to lift their hands and show the coins. Both the President and Mr. Key's quarters lay with their heads up, while Mr. Thompson's lay with its tail up.

"You see," explained Mr. Thompson, "that your quarters were just alike, while mine was different. So I'm the odd man, and I scoop in your money."

Mr. Hayes regarded the disappearance of his quarter of a dollar with some uneasiness, but suggested that they try it again, as he did not fully understand the game, and wished to know the full extent of its wickedness. In the next three experiments the president won, and remarked that he did not see but that if it were played within proper limits it would be an innocent and amusing game.

As the investigation still proceeded, Mr. Evarts and the rest of the Cabinet, with the exception of Mr. Kee and Thompson, gradually withdrew. Twice Mr. Thompson sent the call-boy out for change, and his brow grew darker as the game went on.

It was fully ten o'clock when the President rose up and denounced the game as being of clearly satanic origin; Mr. Thompson coincided with him, observing that its character had entirely changed since his early Washash days. But Mr. Kee, with his pockets loaded down with silver, protested that he saw nothing wrong in the game, and would be glad to assist the President in any further investigation of the kind that he might feel disposed to make.

This is the story of the Cabinet meeting which certain wicked army officers assert is the only true and authorized account of its proceedings. There is reason, however, to doubt its literal truth. It is probable that either the President, the Postmaster-General, or the Secretary of the Navy would have told what occurred at a secret meeting of the Cabinet! If they did not it is evident that we have no trustworthy account how the game stood when the meeting broke up.—New York Illustrated Times.

WHERE THE COLD WAVES COME FROM.—Meteorological observations have now become so extended that evidence is rapidly accumulating to enable us to determine positively the source of the cold aerial waves which sweep across our country during the winter season. The indications are that we owe them to the great area of high barometer in northeastern Siberia where the pressure sometimes exceeds 31.50 inches, and the temperature falls as low as 76 deg. below zero.

The pole of greatest cold is in the neighborhood of Yokutsk, on the Lena, where the average thermometric reading in January of 41 deg. below zero, and where the severest cold exceeds by 10 deg. that experienced by explorers in high arctic regions. This is also the region of the highest barometric pressure known in winter; and from it, doubtless, proceed the waves of intense cold which play so large a part in our winter experiences.

We would call the attention of our readers to the advertisement of the "King of the Blood," a remedy for disorders resulting from impurity of the blood, said to be, by those who have witnessed its remarkable effects, unequalled for the purposes mentioned. The reputation borne by its proprietors, D. Ransom, Son & Co., of Buffalo, N. Y., should be ample guaranty of their claims for this article, but it will be observed that they not only warrant the genuineness of the certificates of cures by an offered reward, but also, in proper cases, offer to disclose its ingredients, thus demonstrating their own good faith in the safety and excellence of its composition—orders said never before to have been made by the proprietors of any other Family Medicine in the world.

One hundred and fifty tons of railroad car material for the Northern Pacific railroad was shipped from New York for Portland, via Panama, on the 10th of the present month. It consists of new running gear for passenger coaches, to be used on the Pen'd Oreille division, and will arrive at Portland about the 12th of next month.

WESTERN CENSUS SUPERVISORS.—President Hayes has appointed as Census Supervisors the following: Henry F. Lucksdorff, for the district of Oregon; F. Sparling, for the district of Washington Territory; Henry G. Langley for the first census district of California; James R. Hardenburg, second California; Alex. Dunn, third California; Chas. W. Dana, fourth California; Clifton H. Moore, for Idaho; Crowley P. Drake, for Arizona; Hugh McQuade, for Montana; Abram S. Hoyt, for New Mexico; J. B. Neill, for Utah; Homer Merrill, for Wyoming; Alex. Hughes for Dakota; L. C. Carpenter, for Colorado; Nevada.

"HOME, SWEET HOME." Biscaccianti, the famous singer so well known to the early Californian, and so intimately connected with memories of the olden and golden days, writes to us from her humble apartments in Rome as follows: I am dreadfully bitter to-night; reflecting upon a life of anxiety, disappointment, and tears, has made me so. I should like, morally speaking, to smash everything to pieces. And as I must let steam off in some way or other, I will try to do so harmlessly, and tell a simple little story to show how some one of the poor "nobodies" of this world may come up quite as truly the heart-pitch as do the so-called great and noble. Ah! how often under a rough coat beats a manlier heart than that which ding dongs under the well cut frock of some fashionable dandy. "A man's a man for a' that." I recall an episode during my first engagement in San Francisco. The house that night was crammed from pit to ceiling. There were lovely women with flashing eyes, and flashing diamonds, attended by model beaux, ever ready to roll their eyes, flirt, and sentimentalize, whether they felt it or not. Sufficient unto the hour is the nonsense thereof! But to my wee story; I had sung many pieces in French, Spanish, and Italian, and finally came the time for the dear old tune of "Home, Sweet Home." I never have sung anything in my life that I loved or felt so much; I suppose it is because I have always yearned after a home, but somehow or other I have never been able to come across it yet—gipsy like, roaming about the world, seeking, but never finding. I hope, when I at last "go away," I shall find home! So I began "Home, Sweet Home." I do believe one could have heard a pin drop, so hushed, so silent was the house, when all at once a sob, a gasp, a sob, stole over the audience like a wall of sorrow. All eyes were turned in the direction from which it came. A poor miner, roughly clad, with his slouched hat partly covering his bronzed face, had entered the pit and, having crept into a corner, was leaning on the back of a seat, weeping as if his very heart would break. Suddenly, recollecting himself, and seemingly aware that every one was looking at him, he rose, and softly stealing down the aisle, left the theatre as if, poor fellow, ashamed of having loved the dear old home before too many people. I shall never forget the almost religious silence which followed that song of mine. It was more to me than the most enthusiastic plaudits that ever rang in my ears; for I know that there were hearts present too full for utterance, and I felt that night, when all was over, as if I had done a great, a real good. Who shall say that by my song of "Home, Sweet Home," I had not drawn a soul from wrong, returned a wandering son to the love of his dear old mother, who was weeping for him not knowing, through his neglect, whether to mourn him as dead, or as lost, only to her! May I not believe that I, too, have had my mission of love and charity!

SLEEP FOR CHILDREN. There is no danger that children can sleep too much. The old proverb, "Who sleeps, eats," is illustrated in those little ones who sleep most. Wakeful children are always peevish, irritable and lean. If they can be induced to sleep abundantly they are quite likely to become good natured and plump. Their sleep should be as much during the hours of darkness as possible, and therefore it is better that they should go to bed before sunset to have their sleep out than to lie long after sunrise in the morning. It is well to let any healthful, growing child or young person sleep until he wakes himself, and then give him such a variety and amount of outdoor exercise as shall make him glad when bedtime comes.
