THE OREGON SENTINEL

JACKSONVILLE:

WEDNESDAY, JULY 28, 1880.

FOR PRESIDENT,

JAS. A. GARFIELD.

Of Ohio

FOR VICE PRESIDENT,

CHESTER A. ARTHUR

Of New York.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS,

GEO. B. CURRY, of Grant.
E. L. APPLEGATE, of Linn.
C. B. W TSON, of Lake.

The Democratic press is laboring hard to force an enthusiasm for Hancock. Poor, deluded ink slingers! Won't their faces elongate when the result of November reveals to them Garfield's triumphant election?

Evidence gathers in one way and another that New York is to be Republican, in all probability, in November, as the Hancock hurrah died out very decidedly and very soon, and the Democrats are not as happy as they were.

The Democratic argument for a change amounts to this: The Republican party has brought the country to the greatest prosperity it has ever known; therefore it is wise to turn that party out and let us come in to enrich ourselves.

The Chicago "Times," which at least may be regarded as impartial, says: "Those who imagine that the Grant men in this part of the country are either dejected or disaffected are likely to find themselves much mistaken before many weeks have gone by."

The Veteran Club of Philadelphia has adopted resolutions indorsing the nomination of Garfield and Arthur, and asking the soldiers of the country to fall into line and advance the support of the party which has never been appealed to in vain when they sought it for relief or encouragement."

Carl Schurz opened the campaign at Indianapolis July 20th in an address of great power to an immense audience. Among other things he spoke of the fitness of the Republican and Democratic candidates for the Presidency and showed the superiority of Garfield for a position demanding the qualifications and experience of a statesman and not those of a soldier.

The Richmond (Va.) "Commonwealth" accepts Hancock, but at the same time says: "We have seen evidences of a disposition to parade before our people the times and places when Gen. Hancock, in command of the Federal forces, overthrew the Confederate forces. We hope this will be discontinued. Our people have no hankering for crow however it may be dished."

The national convention of Irish Republicans which met at Indianapolis, July 15th, was a grand success, and augurs well for the success of the Republican ticket in November. It also shows that the Democratic party does not hold a life-lease on the votes of the Irish-Americans of this country. Garfield and Arthur are getting stronger from day to day, and the ides of November will chronicle a glorious Republican victory.

It having been stated that fifty of the seventy officers of Hancock's old Third Army Corps, who attended the recent re-union at Cape May, expressed themselves in favor of Hancock for President, Thomas Rafferty, late Lieutenant-Colonel of the Seventy first New York Volunteers, Third Army Corps, published a card over his own signature, in the papers of July 17th, containing the statement. Colonel Rafferty asserts that the next day after the statement appeared a canvass of the officers was made, and there were found just four, and no more who would vote for Hancock.

Returning from New Mexico Gen. Grant visited different points in Colorado. At Manitou on July 18th, in an interview he said: "I can say without hesitation that I will give Garfield my hearty support. There is no reason why any Republican should not vote for Garfield. I know him to be a man of talent, thoroughly accomplished, and an upright man. I have nothing against Gen. Hancock, but Garfield is the man for the office." He denied the report that he had complained of Conkling and Logan on the ground that they had deceived him. He said that he had had no letter from either of them, before or after the Convention, since his return to America. He further said that of all men, Conkling and Logan were the last for him to find fault with, and he felt more proud of the 312 votes that stood by him in the Convention, than if he had received the nomination by unfair means.

"A FREE BALLOT."

The Democratic platform contains the following:

"Fourth—The right to a free ballot is a right preservative of all rights, and must and shall be maintained in every part of the United States."

To prove the sincerity of the platform builders we append a few figures selected at random from various counties in Southern States representing the vote of 1876:

	Hayes.	Tilden.
Greene Co., Alabama	2	408
Walton Co., Georgia	2	1,393
Wilkes Co., Georgia	2	1,139
East Feliciana, Co., Louisiana	0	1,736
Lowndes Co., Mississippi	2	2,073
Tallahatchee Co., Mississippi	1	1,144
Yazoo Co., Mississippi	2	3,672
Brown Co., Texas	[illegible]	525
Eastland Co., Texas	3	1,784
Hidalgo Co., Texas	4	1,629
Buchanan Co., Virginia	2	1,330

Will any honest man, not being a fool, pretend to claim that the above figures copied from the record, indicate a free ballot? In 1872 when there was a free ballot or some approach to it, Greene county, Alabama, threw 2,516 Republican votes, Lowndes county, Mississippi, 3,217, and so on. A party which relies on carrying an election by prohibiting a free ballot, and which cannot hold the solid South any other way, prates sanctimoniously about the necessity of "maintaining a free ballot in every part of the United States," as if it were the sole champion of free and fair elections. As it exists in the South, this party is simply an organized crime. It is organized against law, justice, free elections and Republican institutions. It has suppressed political opposition, and in making its crime effective more men have been murdered than fell on both sides in the dreadful encounter at Gettysburg, the greatest battle of the war.—"Oregonian."

THE DIFFERENCE.

A correspondent of the Chicago "Tribune" who recently visited Governor's Island, the place of residence of Gen. Hancock has the following to say about the Generals premises:

Though we live in times of peace everything around Gen. Hancock is on a war footing. An armed sentinel stalks up and down in front of his private residence all the day long and through the weary night. What for, nobody knows, but, tired and jaded, in sunshine and storm, this poor soldier must walk up and down in front of his great master. At the General's residence everything is done in a pedantic, military way. No ordinary citizen can see the General. An orderly, buttoned up and bat in a regulation uniform, receives your card. A haughty chief of staff examines it, and, if your clothes are good enough, he will permit you to stand before the General a moment while he sits, listens, and then waves you away. The ordinary Illinois farmer, with his face browned and his hand calloused with honest toil, would never be allowed to enter the presence of the commanding General.

What a contrast this with the peaceful and natural surroundings of James A. Garfield the Republican candidate for President? The American people are gradually finding out the spirit pervading and governing the respective candidates for the Presidency, and it will not be difficult for them to decide which one of the two is best qualified to entrust the ship of state.

GARFIELD'S LETTER OF ACCEPTANCE.

In his letter of acceptance, given in full on the first page of this week's SENTINEL, Gen. Garfield sounds the keynote of the Republican campaign. He names as the great national issues upon which the party must rest its cause before the people, the enforcement of the election laws in the South, in order that there shall be no intimidation of voters; the restriction of Chinese immigration, so that servile labor may no longer flow in unchecked to degrade the dignity of the free workmen; the support of the financial policy which has led to the resumption of specie payments and the safety of the national credit at home and abroad; the separation of Church and State in all matters that pertain to taxation for educational purposes; the development of our internal resources by judicious improvements of the great natural channels of trade; the protection of home industry by a wise system of tariff laws, and the improvement of the diplomatic service by the selection of the ablest men for this work. It is a manly, straightforward, able document, and will command the respectful attention of all the people. Read it.

It is reported that Hon E. L. Applegate, candidate for Presidential Elector in this State, is still holding a lucrative office in the Portland Custom House. Mr. Applegate should at once resign and we hope his good judgment and fidelity to Republican principles will prompt him to do so at once. This is no time for fooling and the success of the party must not be jeopardized; as the principle is settled that no Federal office holder is eligible as Elector. Besides Mr. Applegate's obligations to canvass the State debar him from discharging his duties as Inspector and he should either attend to one or the other.

A HANCOCK REMINISCENCE.

Singularly enough the abnormal popularity and Washington like greatness and goodness of General Winfield Scott Hancock, as described in glowing adjectives by unterrified orators on ward rostrums, does not seem to be enthusiastically indorsed by those who were personally connected with him during his war career. Among these is Dr. C. B. Hutchins of No. 236 Taylor street, who yesterday, in response to a request for some reminiscences, said:

In February, 1865, I was a medical director of the First Division of the Nineteenth Army Corps, and also surgeon of my regiment, the 116th New York. We were in camp around Winchester, and General Sheridan left us and went up the Shenandoah valley to join Grant at Petersburg, General Hancock coming down to take command about the first of March. The weather was rainy, cold and disagreeable. But his first order was, nevertheless, to the effect that all the baggage be sent to the rear, as a preparation for the campaign. The order created general indignation and consternation. Both boots and overcoats were greatly needed, and as the custom had been previously to retain the overcoats until active service began, the order was generally disobeyed. In the latter part of March the division went into camp at Stephenson's depot, and were reviewed for the first time by Hancock. On this occasion some of the shivering companies cried out "Boots, boots; overcoats, overcoats." Hancock was greatly incensed, and in spiteful indignation issued a second order that all the overcoats should be burned. This was enforced, and the next day all the long line of camp fires were engaged in the consumption of the objectionable articles. The day after that Hancock apparently regretted his haste and countermanded the order. All the coats were consumed, however, and during the continuance after that of the cold spell the men on picket duty and guard suffered greatly from the exposure and a number went on the sick list. This action, and the pompous, insolent and overbearing qualities which were Hancock's chief characteristics made him very unpopular. If the Democracy rely on the soldiers' vote for Hancock it will have to come from men who did not serve under him and know him only through the papers.

EXPRESS ROBBERY.

Portland papers of the 17th instant contain detailed accounts of another express robbery which occurred on Sunday the 11th. On the day alluded to Wells, Fargo's treasure box, on the stage running between Pendleton and Umatilla, was robbed, and a statement of the occurrence was immediately telegraphed to Portland. On Tuesday the case was put into the hands of detectives Hudson and Day, which resulted in the arrest on the 16th of H. C. Paige formerly agent of Wells, Fargo & Co. at Baker City in this State, who was a passenger on the stage at the time. Another way passenger was on the stage, and when he left Paige complained of being fatigued and crawled into the boot to take a nap. On arriving at Umatilla the treasure box was found to have been ransacked, although properly locked. The way bills, money, etc., had all disappeared, but on searching the boot of the stage a sack of gold dust was found by the driver, proving that the box had been rifled of its contents when on the road from Pendleton, and C. D. Barstow Wells, Fargo & Co.'s superintendent, who was in Eastern Oregon, started to work up the case. Paige was suspected from the first, the supposition being that he, knowing the company's method of doing business and having a box key, while feigning to be asleep, opened the box and appropriated the contents. Paige arrived in Portland last Tuesday, and has been shadowed by detectives. It was known that he was without money at Pendleton, but on arriving in Portland seemed to possess considerable, making purchases of jewelry, visiting houses of prostitution, etc. Shortly after his arrest Paige had an examination in the Police Court, and was held for trial in $2500 bail. He declares his innocence, but there is little doubt of his guilt Paige was Division Superintendent of Wells, Fargo for this State some years ago, and has sent a number of men to the penitentiary for stage robbery, some of whom were afterward pardoned on proof of innocence. Paige was a clerk in the Quartermaster's Department during 1858, in Utah with General Albert S. Johnson's command.

P. S. Paige is well known in Jacksonville where he married a Miss Coffin, who is now divorced from him by reason of his irregular, dissolute habits. He is now in jail in Pendleton awaiting trial, and his crimes will no doubt secure him a term in the penitentiary. The way of the transgressor is hard.
