One of the most remarkable results of the recent Presidential election is the strength which has shown itself in the markets for wool. The effect began to appear immediately after the Indiana election, and is universally felt itt every section of this country, since the assurance that the Republican party is to continue in power is an assurance that the tariff on wool will be undisturbed for sometime. Before the election mills bought only small lots, just enough to supply the needs of the day, but immediately after the counting of the votes they began to invest more freely, and some houses in Chicago, and probably most wool houses in the land can say that the wool sold by them during the last ten days exceeded from the sheep. That the farmers are well pleased with this condition of affairs there is no need to say.
