KIT.

It was a gala day on the avenue. All the fast horses in town were out showing their paces; and the merry sleigh riders shouted with mirth and enjoyment as they raced neck and neck five teams deep, and when they came to a deadlock it was still more fun. At one juncture, however, these wretches that did not sound mirthful, wild plunge among the thoroughbred and some policemen ran out from the sidewalk and talked in authoritative tones, but the crowd was so dense no one could see what was going on among the noisy drivers and their plunging horses.

"It's only a couple of boys," said the beautiful Felicia Hauton, set in, back among the luxurious white robes, "two of those horrid newsboys. They ought not to be allowed on the avenue at all. They're always getting under foot and frightening the horses—such good time as we were making too—now disagreeable."

"Anybody killed?" asked one fine gentleman of another as they passed. "Naw, too boys mixed up, that's all; me started to cross the street and feel, and fell, and teth' g't run over trying to save him, street Awahs, you saw, can square a few—ta, ta."

"Got under the e. e. of a high flyer and spoiled his time," said another in a disgusted tone. Then the avenue was cleared and the tide of enjoyment went on, and no more Arabs were so foolish as to sacrifice themselves by obstructing the triumph of the fashionable throng.

At sundown of that same day two poorly dressed boys applied for admission at the doors of Harper's hotel, and inquired for one of their number, who had been brought thither in a snore afternoon. They were permitted to see him for a few moments, and on tiptoe they entered the long, clean ward and sought out the narrow bed on which he lay. When they had awkwardly greeted him, they sat down upon the edge of the cot, and were much embarrassed by the strangeness of the scene, and painfully conscious of their own hands and feet; they were also rather shocked at their comrade's clean floor; it looked so unaturally white, with a dab of red on either cheek. Their eyes roved stealthily about over the other sick beds and their occupants.

"Say old feller," began the biggest of the two boys, addressing his sick comrade, "ain't you puttin' on a heap of stief?" "Where's Kit?" asked the sick boy, fretfully; "why ain't he a-long of you?" The two visitors looked at each other, and their faces grew downcast and troubled; they dug the toes of their boots into the clean floor at the bedside and shuffled uneasily, while both coughed violently in concert; then the boy blurted out: "Kit went on an errand, and he told me to tell you he would be up to-morrow. He sez, sez he, tell Jim it's all rite."

"You ain't gassin, he you! Kit ain't got hurt nor nothin'?" "He couldn't go errands if he was hurt, could he?" asked the other dog golly; "an' here," improvising a lie for the occasion, "he sent yer this."

The sick and injured boy smiled as he took the big orange in his feverish hands and turned it over. "I knew Kit wasn't the boy to forget me—here, you fella, take a bite; it's sunny an orange and stick of candy and lot of pie we've divided atween us afore this. Poor little Kit! He knowed as how I liked 'em. Here, you take a squeeze," as he handed it back. But the boys wouldn't touch it, and the sick patient put it under his pillow. Then he said, in a strange, quavering voice: "I want you fella to look after Kit, and don't you forget it when I gets well I'll pay back every cent; but it'll be a long time, for I'm all mashed in. He's a little fel and needs lookin' arter. Now, boys, don't go back on me, will you?"

Y' n wouldn't worry about Kit," said the spokesman of the two, looking away and digging violently at the floor. "He's all rite."

"Lord, I am tired," said the sick boy. "If it wasn't for Kit I'd as leave died as get well; but I promised mother as how I'd allus take care of the little chap, and I've done it; and he wasn't cut up nor bruised nor nuthin' when they pulled him out'n from under the hoss's hoof!"

"Wasn't cut up nor bruised nor nuthin'," echoed the visitor with his back to the bed. "Good! Jest you look arter him till I get outter this and I'll work my fingers off for ye. Lord, how tited I am!"

He drifted away to sleep and the two boys left without waking him, but before they went one of them slipped a little leather bag of marbles in his hand and the other put a few pennies crumpled in a dirty piece of newspaper under his pillow, where he would see them on waking.

"He'll think Kit sent 'em," said one, as they sc'fly retreated; "they were in Kit's pocket when the policeman found him—to think he doesn't know."

That night, when the hospital doctor sent his rounds he found the new boy wide awake, but very still. To the familiar eye of the physician his symptoms were clearly defined. "Well, my boy," he said, kindly, "what can I do for you?"

The boy's face lightened up. "I want to see Kit—send for Kit."

"Yes, yes," answered the doctor, hastily; "but you must wait until morning."

"I don't—think—I—can—sir. I guess I'm booked—for—t other—lace. It would be all rite—if it wasn't for Kit. But I promised mother I'd take care of him, and what'll he do without me? I can't leave Kit!"

The death dew was on his forehead. He beat his hands helplessly on the white spread, while his pale lips continued to murmur, "I can't leave Kit!"

The physician sat down by him. It is against the rules of a hospital to hold much converse with the dying, or even to notify those who are in extremities of the approach of death; but his was a child—the doctor assumed the responsibility.

"My boy, if you know that you could not get well, would you feel very sorry?"

"Not for myself; only for Kit."

"But if I told you that Kit was well taken care of; that a rich and kind father had sent for him, and given him a beautiful home—"

"Now you're gassin," said the dying boy with his old fervor. "Dad ain't that sort; besides, he broke mother's heart, and Kit wouldn't speak to him if he cut back."

"No earthly father, dear boy, but a heavenly one; the priest has told you of him, and the home he gives his children. He it is who has sent for Kit."

The sick boy made up his parched lips to whistle. "Whew," he said, brokenly, "Kit's dead!—killed arter all, when I tried so hard to save him!"

"He was dead when they took him, up," said the doctor, "and not a bruise or a broken limb—the shock killed him, and he is safe now with his Master—don't you believe that?"

But the boy did not heed him; his lips moved faintly, and the doctor bending down, heard him say again, "Kit's dead!" Then there was a long silence, and before he left the doctor turned the white sheet over the tranquil face, and Kit and his brother were together again.—N. Y. Graphic.

Railroad Extension. The agreement lately ratified between the syndicate and the German bondholders of the Oregon and California railroad, the bondholders agree to exchange their bonds for preferred stock equal in amount to the face of the bonds and common stock to the amount of 50 per cent. of the face of the bonds, the common stock representing the unpaid coupons. The syndicate agrees to take an issue of $6,000,000 new general mortgage bonds at par, being $20,000 per mile of completed road, 200 miles of the original Oregon and California and 100 miles of the former Oregon and Central. Of these bonds $2,000,000 are to be taken at once, and the proceeds used to pay off all prior liens; the other $4,000,000 will be taken as required to build the extension from Roseburg to the California line, which will be begun at once.—Standard.

New Mexico has an anomalous name. Instead of "new," it is the oldest settled part of the United States. There is a church yet standing in Santa Fe which was built more than three hundred years ago, and a college was founded there long before the Dutch settled in Albany.

How a Dying Child's Gift Built a Church in Philadelphia.

About nine years ago a little girl came with her mother asking to be received as a member of the Cohoesink Church, Philadelphia. She was but 7 years old, and the Session was not disposed to receive her on account of her age, though she had answered the questions asked her better than many adults. They asked: "Don't you think you had better wait a while?" But she said, "You said last Sabbath the Lord's name was for those who love and obey Him, and I am sure I love Him, and am trying to obey." The pastor asked if she had been coming to church, to which she replied: "Mamma and I come at night. We are poor, and our clothes are not good enough to come in the day-time." The pastor then said: "Brethren, if you feel that you can not receive this child, I think I will have to take her on my own responsibility." She was accordingly received. She was a frail child and not often afterward able to be at church; and during the following summer her father and mother took her to Yonk-on to see if the change and mountain air would improve her health. On the first Sabbath in September of that year the pastor was sent for to be with her in her dying hour. He talked and prayed with her as already an heir almost of heaven, and when he came to part with her she told her mother to get her money, all that she had received in her life, consisting of a $1 bill and 3 and 5 cent pieces, amounting to $1.21. This she placed with her own feeble hands in the box in which was the last powder of her medicine, saying as she put in the money: "I shall not want any more medicine;" and then turning to her pastor with an inexpressible look of loving confidence, thinking in her childish simplicity, that this money was enough, and taking his hand, said: "I want you to take this money and build with it a church for poor people like us. Now," said she, "promise me so I shall know, when I am in heaven, that it is done." She died that evening.

The pastor who thus received her might was the Rev. Dr. Samuel A. Mutchmore. He accepted her trust, and soon after began sending out a circular, under the title of "A Child's Legacy," asking for additions to the fund. The result has at length been the building of a $60,000 church to the memory of the little girl. The property at Montgomery avenue and Berwick street, Philadelphia, was first purchased and mortgaged for $7,000, the instrument being held by the late Alexander Stuart of New York, and his brother, Robert Stuart, who agreed to cancel the mortgage, provided the church should be finished by January 1, 1882. Alexander Stuart died, but his brother Robert signed an agreement to carry out the terms of the original contract. Having the ground Pastor Mutchmore cast around to get a congregation and place of worship. The church must necessarily be built by private and voluntary subscription. On the night of May 26, 1876, the congregation was organized in a little frame shanty, and numbered forty-two persons, and a Sabbath school was founded; both have been growing ever since. The church was built over and around the old shanty, which was taken out after the first floor of the new edifice was ready to be laid. The new building is to be literally dedicated for poor people, being free in all its privileges. It has now a membership of 284 persons and an average attendance of 600. Its Sunday school comprises of 45 teachers and 355 scholars in the main classes, and 5 teachers and 284 scholars in the infant class, and it is situated in one of the most rapidly developing sections of Philadelphia.—[New York Times.

"Which is the more delicate sense, feeling or sight?" asked a professor. "Feeling," responded a student. "Give a proof of it with an example." "Well, my chum can feel his mustache, but nobody else can see it," responded the student.

Cooking schools are becoming the rage in fashionable society. They are attended by ladies who never expect to do any cooking.
