MARGARET'S MONEY.

"She has got £5,000," said the old man "and she's a good girl. She'll be a catch for somebody."

Then I thought he looked at me. "Why should he look at me?" I thought. "I'm not a husband worth angling for, as he knows very well, this man who pays me my small salary every week with his own hands."

Still he did look at me, and I answered with a word or two; I forget what now.

"Yes," he said, talking with a meaning, too, looking at me evidently to see how I took the news; "yes and what do you suppose she does with it? Has it locked up in my fireproof safe in my fireproof vault; doesn't use it in any way; doesn't get interest on it; locks it up as she does her rings and pins, and lets it lie never touched."

"I wonder you don't give her better advice." I said.

"Give a woman advice!" he said. "Try it. However, I approve of this. Better keep her dowry locked up safe than risk and lose it. I'm her guardian. Her father and I had quarreled, you know. But when he died he left her and her money in my care. A nice thing for an old bachelor to have a young nice quartered on him for life! I'll marry her off as soon as I can. I say, Fisher, come up and take tea with Miss Giddings, Tom, "said the old man; and as I bowed I saw a little velvet headed crutch leaning against the girl's chair. She was lame then. Old Giddings thought this an obstacle to her making a good match so he offered her to Tom Fisher.

"It won't do, old man," I thought. 'I shouldn't mind a plain face, so much, dut a lame wife will never do for me. Then something whispered faintly in my ear: "£5,000!" For the rest Miss Giddings was fair and pleasant in her manner. She was a lady, too, which seemed odd for old Simon's niece, for he was as vulgar as he was rich; and she sang to us after tea very sweetly. I liked a girl, with dash and color, and still her blue eves and sweet smile haunted me a little after I went home. "She'll never quarrel with one," I thought; and a woman worth £5,000 rould be a catch certainly; but that crutch! I'll stay away from old Simon's house for the future." But he would not let me stay away he kept on urging me to go home with him. There was a Marian Moore. Perhaps she liked me a little I admired her intensely; but she had no money, and I should take her away from her snug home to some poor sort of place if I married her. I should find it hard work to feed and clothe her decently. This fair sweet Margaret was rich, and as time passed on I began to see her liking for me. And I sat in the office one day, three months from the time of my first visit, wondering whether I could be quite sure that I Ha, ha!" should be good enough to the little thing I meant to marry for her money, to keep her from knowing that there was no actual love for her in my heart. And as I pondered, the voice of old Simon reached my ears: "Tom Fisher, up in the moon again, eh? Well, well, when a fellow is in love we excuse laziness in him. There's my niece Margaret pouring the tea in the slop basin and oversetting the milk at breakfast, 'Maggie,' says I, 'you're a-thinking of some one, an' ve.' She blushed to her ears. You've managed to get into some good graces in that quarter, Tom." "Do you think so?" I said. "I know so," said the old man. ought not to say so, you know but I'm whispering to me. "You don't love her," said one. "You don't hate her," said the other, end.

I listened to him then, two voices

"You do want £5,000," said the other. It would make a man of you. You could go into business on your own account. You'd cease to be a slave in this dingy office." Five thousand pounds! said I to myself. Then I started to my feet. "Mr. Giddings," I said, "would you be willing to give your niece to me as my wifet"

"Tom Fisher, I'd give her to any de cent young man. A girl bothers me; I'm tired of the charge. Every one doesn't want a lame wife. If you like her, take her, and on your wedding day I'll hand the £5,000 to you and be rid of the charge."

I turned faint and sat down to my desk; but went to old Simon's house that night and saw Margaret. She look ed as fair and happy as a child. I sat down by her and took her hand.

"Are you going to say 'No,' Maggie?" I said, and she lifted her innocent lips to mine and kissed me. "I'll be very, very good to you."

But there was no lover's warmth in my heart; only a kind of gentle pity for the girl who was to bring me £5,000. We were engaged. Old Simon joked us coarsely, and seemed to exult over the affair. I might even have doubted the existence of the £5,000, but that Maggie told me of it herself. "Uncle was keeping it for me to live

STEAMBOAT ON KLAMATH LAKE.

Thenewsteamer just built for Thatcher & Worden at Linkville, for navigating Klamath Lake, will be one of the greatest benefits to the people of that section yet introduced. It will do all the business in the way of freight and passenger transportation from Linkville to Klamath Reservation and Ft. Klamath, as well as other points on the lake and small streams emptying into the lake. This lake is about 37 miles in length and 16 miles in width. and for steamer excursions is one of the loveliest and most picturesque. The Klamath Indian Agency, where some eight or nine hundred Indiana are quartered, is on Wood river, about miles from the lake, and 4 miles further up this stream is Fort Klamath. The steamer will endeavor to reach Fort Klamath, the only difficulty being the short turns in the stream, which can be cut away. If the boat cannot reach the Fort, she can get within one mile of it, which will be a great advantage. The short turn a mile below the Fort could be cut away without any very great amount of work, the stream being plenty deep enough all the way up to and above the Fort, with room enough at the Fort for turning round to come back. It usually takes about 10 or 12 hours to make the trip by stage, owing to the round about way and bad condition of the wagon road, while the steamer can make it in less than four hours. It is the intention of the owners of the steamer to tow burges in hauling freight and as there is no current good time can be made, and communication afforded with all the islands, and with all the little streams emptying into the lake. In the course of time, an effort may be made to build a canal with locks at Link river, which joins Big Klamath with Little Klamath Lake, the latter being mostly in this county, and when this is accomplished the book could also continue down the Klamath river as far as Plevna. The rapids of Link river would not permit steam navigation, unless locks could be put in it. By such an improvement a steamer could come down to Butte Creek Valley in this county, and thence to Whittle's ferry on the Klamath, in addition to navigating all the water above Linkville. Linkville is said to be improving greatly, many buildings going up and the population rapidly increasing by newcomers. The daily mail for that country ought to connect with Yreka, as the principal bulk of the mail comes from the south, and goes to Ashland and thence to Linkville, double distance, except the first day of the week, when the two weekly mails leave Yreka, one via Butte creek and the other via Klamath river. A daily mail from Yreka to Linkville would save one half the time required to send the Eastern and Southern mails via Ashland, as Linkville is the same distance from Ashland as from Yreka. and Yreka is over 45 miles south of Ashland with the high Siskiyou intervening to make the distance equal to that made me shudder. Without a 60 on an ordinary level road.—[Yreka From E. H. Autenrieth, who arriv-
