WERE JEFFERSON AND FRANKLIN INFIDELS?

Dr. J. P. Newman recently before a large Brooklyn audience asks the above question, and quotes the following autograph letter in proof of Jefferson's religious sentiments.

Thomas Jefferson to Thomas Jefferson Grotjan: Your affectionate mother requests that I would address to you as a namesake something which might have a favorable influence on the course of life you have to run.

FAREWELL.

MONTICELLO, Jan 10, 1824.

It was in the Constitutional Convention of 1787 that Franklin introduced a motion for daily prayers, and in favor of his motion thus eloquently spoke:

In the beginning of the contest with Britain, when we were sensible of danger, we had daily prayers in this room for the Divine protection.

A St. Louis telegram of July 26th says, that Gov. Crittenden in conversation with a reporter regarding the death of Judge Clifford of the supreme bench, stated that sometime ago when he (Crittenden) was in Washington, Judge Clifford told him that he had prepared a complete and detailed history of the proceedings of the electoral commission of which he was a member, and that it would be published after his death, unless his wife (who was custodian of the manuscript) should otherwise decide, and that its publication would create a sensation.

The Arizona Floods.

A Tucson, (A. T.) dispatch of July 28th says: This is the fifth day since we had a mail from the east, and three days since we had a mail from California. Two hundred miles of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railroad along the Rio Grande is more or less washed out, while the Southern Pacific has washouts from El Paso to Yuma, covering about 500 miles of the roadbed.

It now transpires that Guiteau, the would-be-assassin, was, about twelve years ago, a member of the Bible class of Plymouth church, and his photograph was hanging on the wall with those of his former class-mates.

A party of soldiers from Fort Klamath who made an effort to go up to Crater Lake late in June, we learn, turned back without accomplishing their object, the snow in the approaches of the lake being too deep and soft.

Secretary Kirkwood has decided that pensioners who have been inmates of soldiers' homes, and who leave these institutions without the consent of the managers, are entitled to their pensions directly. He holds that if the care of soldiers' homes is not given to or is repudiated by the soldier, the institution, and not the institution, is entitled to the pension.
