

FROM THE FRONT.

W. F. B., in the Roseburg "Plaindealer" of July 22d, sends the following to that paper:

Thursday morning, July 6th, while the roads were yet saturated with the copious rainfall of the 4th and the air cool and bracing, your correspondent drew the lines over a goolly "turn out" from Carlton's and struck for the "front," to enjoy a little relaxation from long confinement at the desk and a little recreation, riding over the country, seeing new sights, visiting friends, snuffing fresh country air and enjoying ourself generally.

Our course lay along the line of the extension of the O. & C. R. R. south from this city. This road follows the sinuous winding of the South Umpqua to a point about 30 miles south of Roseburg. The river then deflects to the east and the road to the south-west, where it enters Cow Creek valley at Riddleville, follows up that valley about 30 miles further to "Dowville," and a little further on the railroad strikes Cow Creek hill, through which the company are boring—or preparing to bore—a tunnel, something over 2700 feet. Here the company have a large force cutting the "approach" to the tunnel. It is a stupendous undertaking. The woods surrounding the "approach," covering over 200 acres are alive with workmen whose clang and clatter in all the peculiar phases of diversified labor incident to such an enterprise are almost deafening. The stentorian voice of command of the "Chinese herders," the neighing of horses, the braying of mules, the felling of trees, the ringing of anvils, hammers and tongs, the cracking of whips, the creaking of wagons and carts, chopping sawing and hammering, and at stated periods the explosion of blasts, making terrific sounds in the hitherto silent forest, are truly wonderful, transforming the soft "woodland echoes" into a sort of pandemonium. But, under the supervisory management of one mind, all this diversity of labor moves with precision—is as regular as clock-work—design, order and system being observed throughout all this multitudinous division of labor.

At a given signal to the teamsters to "knock off for dinner," it was the work of scarce one minute till a cavalcade of horses, with their drivers, were moving toward camp, and at another given signal an army of Chinese went scampering pell mell whooping and hallowing in Celestial gibberish to the Chinese quarters, and about ten minutes comparative silence reigned, while pork, beef, beans, potatoes, cabbage, rice and other edibles disappeared from mortal gaze to fill the stomachs of the hungry army of laborers, washed down by the usual beverages, tea, coffee or water—the latter indulged in quite sparingly.

Notice was given that at 20 minutes to one o'clock the "stump blast" would be fired, and that all persons must look out for themselves and their teams safety, so at 12:30, the laborers having bolted their dinners, set themselves in motion towards a place of safety; some went half a mile away, others got behind large trees and waited in suspense the explosion, which occurred in about 8 minutes after igniting the fuses. To one unaccustomed to it, it was a grand sight. The explosion of 200 or 300 pounds of powder that had been carefully placed under the base of some giant fir that had withstood the storms of centuries, whose far-reaching roots had burrowed their interlacing fingers firmly in the bosom of Mother earth, produced deep detonations like the artillery of Heaven, throwing skyward tons of wood, earth and rock that was truly awful. A solid fir stump from three to six feet in diameter with the earth attached was shattered into a thousand pieces and sent flying in every direction between the verticle and angle of about 45 degrees, and rising to such a height that the random range was near half a mile. I was shown fragments of stumps of a thousand pounds weight that had been thrown near half a mile. After the explosion of the blasts, all hands hurry back to their respective stations, and at the given signal work is resumed moving the earth and debris from the excavation. Such is the work at the north portal to the tunnel of Cow Creek hill on the line of the O. & C. R. R.; which is in a dense forest and will be 2770 feet from the north to the south portal.

At Riddleville (or Solsburg) preparations for a town are progressing, some say "getting ready for the cars," which are expected by the first of September. Here we discovered the enterprising saloon man is ahead of all competitors for public favor, well knowing that this precursor of the present form of Christian civilization will find ample patronage, and so has his bar up in a nobby and attractive style, with barrels, kegs, decanters and bottles filled with double-distilled damnation and glasses awaiting the decanted beverage which creates instead of satiates thirst, for the more one drinks the more he wants to drink. But such is the life in our boasted free country, where man can drink and damn himself body and soul and no one dare hinder. Oh, Liberty, boon of intelligent men, where are thy true votaries! Echo answers Iowa.
