PASSING THROUGH THE SUEZ CANAL.

After coaling at Malta we steamed down the Mediterranean, over the moothest sea and beneath the bluest sky it was ever my happy pertion to see. It was about five o'clock one morning when we first saw the lighthouse at Port Said, and about eight o'clock we entered between the two piers which guard the entrance to the canal and stretch far out into the Mediterranean. Passing a Turkish frigate and a French ram we slowly steamed close to the left hand shore and made fast to a buoy. No sooner were we fast than the Arabs swarmed on board, and soon coal was coming over the side and into the bunkers at a rapid rate sheds, for this is the great coaling port for steamers bound eastward, there being quite a difference in the price here and at the other end of the canal. On the right was the town of Port Said. while in front, lost far in the desert, appeared the canal, the grandest engineering feat of the age. Just fancy the amount of labor when it was necessary to carry the sand a mile off into the desert and at the same time prevent the rurrounding sand from drifting and rolling into its place. Just deserts.—Correspondence St. Louis take a handful of sand out from a pile and see how quickly the hollow is filled up, and you then form some idea of the undertaking. At dusk we tied up, having made about thirty miles, as we were only allowed to go "slow" through the canal for fear of injuring the banks. The next morning found us on our way, and soon we were threading the crooked channel through the lake with the town of Ismailia broad off the port beam. After about two hours' steaming at full speed we again slowed down and entered the other part of the canal, and again passed through between the same brown banks with disgust, and only enlivened by the stations, with their few feet of surronding verdure and occasional steamers bound to the westward, too few and far between, which we passed or which passed us, until we finally steamed into the Gulf of Suez about 5 in the afternoon. Off on our left gleamed the houses of Suez and here we left our French pilot and took up a native Red Sea pilot, black as a coal and mute as one of the sphinxes which alorn the native "Republican."
