"Nature, while she specially built the human form to stand erect, has specially decreed that men and women should occasionally rest themselves by assuming a sedentary position. Almost every medical authority on the deformities of the human body has drawn attention to the fact that standing too long operates in a vicious direction, which, by elongating certain muscles, weakens them; that from the necessity of changing position, in order to rest the muscles, it occurs that when people are standing they alternately balance themselves first on one leg and then on the other, but more frequently on the left; and that a girl with a weak spine, after standing upright for some time, generally does not keep her feet in line, but places one above the other. Curvature of the spine, albeit temporary, is the result. The habit of standing on one leg, almost unavoidable in standing too long, induces the shoulders to lose their horizontal level. The one opposite to the projecting hip becomes higher than the other, and the spine becomes deformed laterally at this part."

It is an unwritten law, well understood in journalism, that no editor is under the slightest obligation to give his reason for his acceptance or non-acceptance of a manuscript. He is not called upon to write a private critique on the article to the author of it. His acceptance or rejection is an absolute and unquestionable fact. Among amateur writers this does not appear to be understood. All sub editors and reporters understand that it is an unjustifiable impertinence to ask the managing editor his reason for publishing or not publishing any matter submitted to his judgment. Outside writers and aspiring amateurs rarely seem to comprehend this truth, and their transgressions are largely from ignorance rather than intention. The nature of editorial work requires absolute power of decision, in order to preserve the unities of the journal the editor conducts - Boston Travler.

We may mention a few things which a man should never do with a horse: Never start him out of a walk into a trot when rising a hill; always let him walk till over the summit. Never allow him to drink immediately after being fed; give him water before he has a grain, working him again an hour after he has eaten his feed. Never allow him to drink a pailful of water at a time. The capacity of his stomach is sixteen quarts; four quarts of water is enough to have in it at any time. Never allow him to drink cold water when he's hot, nor give him a grain when hungry. Hay is the best to feed for a hungry horse. When coming home from a journey give him water when two or three miles from the house; this will be warm in his stomach before he reaches the stable, and he will be ready for his hay when he arrives home.

Lewiston - During the first of the week Mr. Wm. F. Briggs of Canyonville had been engaged in locating and surveying the new town of Lewiston. This place is located on the line of the railroad some twelve miles south of Riddle on the west side of Cow creek. The Road company have located extensive side tracks and secured ample grounds for woodsheds, etc., and promise to make considerable improvements thereon. Mr. Lewis the proprietor will use all endeavors to make it a flourishing village. There are one hotel, three saloons and some other improvements in progress. A petition is circulated and a Post Office will be established as soon as the cars make that point. - "Plaindealer."

From a recent grain circular, we make the following extract: The average production of wheat in the United States during the past ten years has been 352,604,844 bushels. The largest yield of any one year was that of 1880, being 468,546,723 bushels. The production for 1882 is estimated at 525,000,000 bushels, which gives us an excess of 26,450,277 bushels more than any one year in the United States. This excess of wheat is offset to some extent by the shortage in the corn crop which is estimated at one-third less than it was in 1880.

A magnetic rod has enabled Captain Chaplin to discover 350 tons of copper that was lost fifty years ago off Erie, Penn., by the wreck of a vessel during a storm. The treasure is worth $150,000, and lies in about eight fathoms of water.

We would suggest that a person beginning to raise sheep might find a flock which he might pasture through the summer at so much per head, and thus gain some information in handling them. A flock of 200 sheep, well bought, the latter part of June, to be pastured through the remainder of the season, with a view of feeding for sale at the most favorable period, should be judiciously fed from the start. If the pasture is good the sheep will do well on that alone, but a little extra feed will be liberally repaid in fattening. As fattening is the object sought, let it be done in the most economical way. A little grain on pasture will pay much better than the same amount of grain in winter. As we have often advised, economy requires that animals intended for meat should be pushed in the warm season. A quarter of a pound of corn and oats, or corn and wheat bran, or corn and linseed meal, mixed, for each sheep, will produce a greater result during the warm weather than twice the amount of feed in winter with good hay. The time to give a start to fattening sheep is in summer. If these sheep become fat in the fall so much the better are they for feeding in the winter. Such sheep will stand the cold, and gain on a much smaller ration than if they were thin in the fall. The best Western feeders of cattle wisely give corn on pasture. Sheep feeding should be done in the same way, except that it is better to give some more nitrogenous feed with corn. The rule should be to push the sheep in warm weather, and then feeding in winter will be comparatively easy. - "Ex."

A Letter from Adam to Eve. In Josh Billings' "Cook Book and Pictorial Receipts," the following interesting letter is found: EPOSA, December, Year Two. Dear Eve: I have been on the rampage now one month, prospecting for our new home, and have seen some ranches that will do pretty well, but none of them just the ticket. The old garden is a hard place to beat, but we have lost that, and turned out now to root, hog, or die. We will fight it out now, on this line, if it takes all summer. Eating that apple was a great blunder, but, my dear girl, let bygones be bygones; there is a hope for us yet. Just as soon as I strike a good claim I will come back to you. Watch over Cain closely, he is a brick. The weather is raw and cold; I feel that I am too thinly clad. No more now, from your loving ADAM. P. S. - Has Cain cut another tooth yet!

A man who lost money by the failure of a bank swore he would never trust another corporation. When he had occasion to deposit more money, he put it in a tin box and the tin box in the ashbarrel and the old setting hen on the top. His theory was that no one would think of looking for money there; but if he did the old hen would resent the disturbance and prove a good detective. Alas for human hopes! When he looked for his money it was gone. The old hen was cross, but had not proved a good protection. She was too much of a politician. With a little coaxing she had shut her eyes and kept still while the steal went right on under her.

It is not generally known, says the Seattle "Intelligencer," but statistics demonstrate the fact, that Ezra Meeker, of Puyallup, is the largest hop grower in the United States. This year he will gather a crop from 93 acres, the yield from which is estimated at 150,000 pounds. Next year he will have about 120 acres in hops alone. He has been offered 43 cents per pound for his entire crop, but this offer has been refused, as he expects to get at least 50 cents per pound for them before the season is over. He is now preparing to gather his crop, but the work of picking will not commence before the 15th of next month.

A Portland young lady was looking at some hosiery, last week, and asked the clerk, "How do you sell those?" at the same time holding up before him a long pair of zebra-colored ones. "Those are worth $5 a pair," he answered. "Oh my," twitted the giddy creature, "they come pretty high - don't they?" "Y-y-yes," stammered the bashful youth, "th they come p-pr-pretty high; bu-bu-but your' pretty tall, you know."
