It is a well known fact that editors never get any praise for any of their good deeds, except it comes from one of the craft. So when we see honorable mention made of one of the members of the scissors and paste pot we take the pleasure in reproducing the article. For this reason we clip the following from the Denver "Tribune," as it refers to a worthy Brother, once a resident of this place, and whose affability and amiability was the envy of the bloods of Crescent City. The article refers to H. L. J. Warren, or, as he was often called, "Alphabetical Warren," of Big Flat notoriety.
"H. L. J. Warren, the editor of the Eagle River "Shaft," enjoys the reputation of having been licked by indignant subscribers more times than any other editor in the West. He has been in Colorado about a year, in that period he has been walloped twenty-eight times. But he is the Tag Wilson of modern journalism and takes punishment as kindly and naturally as most men would take a meal. He is a short, chunky fellow, of blondish proclivities, faint moustache, round face, genteel clothes, ample stomach and a benign smile; he is addicted to jokes, cigars, beer, and perspiration. If he were not shrewd, he would have no difficulty in making successes of life simply by his bull-dog pertinacity. It is pleasant to meet an occasional editor who courts rather than avoids a whaling."—"Record."
It is positively alleged that Gen. W. T. Sherman has recently been received into the Roman Catholic church. The ceremonies of the occasion were rather private.
James Her, aged 73 years, died at his home near Butteville on the 7th inst. Deceased came to Oregon in 1847.
About two hundred marriages are consummated in Linn county each year.
