"Then everything was ready, and weight to this decision. He says, during the summer and fall children ever may have grown or become attached to the surface of the fruit.

The fungoid origin of whooping cough was asserted some years since, by M. Svetzerick and seems now to be confirmed by M. Yschamer, who says he has found certain lower organisms in the spittle of whooping cough patients-organisms not met with in any those which by their agglomeration, from the black points or spots on the skin of many fruits, especially apples. M. Yschamer, by inoculating rabbits with their fungus, produced similar results to whooping cough.

The writer of this article as a miroscopist has examined fruits this winter, and has found the black spots on the apples to consist of a fungus-one of the eidia. The spots vary in size from a pin's head to a good zized pea. A small portion of the dark downy tuft growing in the centre of the spot, when removed by the point of a penknife to a suitable slide and placed under the microscope will show the fungus. Mycelium and threads and spores extending from these sometimes cover a large part of the apple, as may be seen with even a low power of the instrument. Slides can easily be prepared so as to show the fungus either as opaque or transparent. The spores are inconceivably small, and thousands of them with the mycelum might lodge in the fauces without being felt, unless they should begin to germinate, The microscope reveals the fact that the decayed part of apples also is infested through and through with a similar fungus. Mr. Thomas Taylor, a microscopist in Washingtion, D. C., has discovered an Entozoa one of the anguelluze in a diseased pear, also in diseased peaches, and even a diseased tomato.—"Buffale M. & S. Journal."
