

STRANGE BUT TRUE.

A VIRGINIA YOUNG WOMAN, SUDDENLY TRANSFORMED INTO A MAN, MARRIES HER CHUM.

Martinsburg, W. Va., Jan. 24.—At 4 o'clock this afternoon in the little brick church used by the southern Methodist congregation two people were married by the Rev. John Longstreet, formerly the chaplain of Job Stuart's confederate regiment of cavalry. Both parties have been known for thirty five years as respectable women. The groom, if such a name can be applied to the leading spirit, has been known for ten years as a lady of correct habits, modest demeanor, and marked intelligence and refinement. His (or her) name has been Jane Catherine Jayne. For the past ten years she has kept a little store in the village known as "Rest," thirteen miles from here. There is no better family in that section than the Jaynes. The mother was left a widow in comfortable circumstances some years since and married again, but subsequently separated from her second husband, and now lives on one of the best farms in Frederick county, Virginia, near the town of Rest. She reared seven children successfully, four of whom married prosperous farmers in the neighborhood. Another lives at this time with her mother. Still another conducts a flourishing school for young ladies near her mother's home, and the remaining one, Jane Catherine, who from childhood evinced remarkable business talent, has from the time of attaining years of maturity been engaged in commercial pursuits.

Living quietly and attending closely to business, the neighbors gradually came to look upon the proprietor of the little store as an old maid. Judge, therefore, of their astonishment when on last Tuesday Jane Catherine appeared in Martinsburg, boldly announced her conversion from the gentler to the sterner sex, and arrayed herself in a suit of masculine habilitated boots, and followed up this performance by declaring her intention of marrying Miss Annie Hinton, a lady who for years has been her associate and assistant in the commercial establishment at the town of Rest. In explanation she said, that there had never been any occasion to doubt femininity till a fortnight since, when, being led to visit Drs. McGue and Love, at Winchester, a simple and painless operation was performed, and the announcement made that there could be no doubt as to perfect masculinity, and that the ignorant who superintended Jane Catherine's advent into the world deserved to be prosecuted for the dense stupidity which brought about the subsequent wearing of petticoats instead of trousers. Armed with this information Jane Catherine lost no time in carrying out her prearranged programme. The license issued for the ceremony was made out in the name of J. C. Jayne instead of Jane Catherine, it being the supposed woman's intention to have the feminine name of Jane changed to the more suitable name of John as soon as an act of the legislature could be procured for that purpose.

The parties who were joined together in matrimony have not only been associated together in business, but have lived together for years in the closest social intimacy, working, eating, and sleeping together without the suspicion that they belonged to opposite sexes. Some indignation was at first expressed among the neighbors over the present discovery, but on further consideration of the matter they became pacified and joined in congratulations. The groom presented a somewhat delicate but manly and determined appearance when the luxuriant braids of hair were neatly and closely trimmed, and the radiant countenance, guileless of moustache or whiskers, looked positively handsome in comparison with that of the bride, who is apparently two or three years older and hardly as prepossessing in her personal appearance as her companion.

A river item from the "Judge." "Why, William where have you been? Your hat's knocked in, your coat's torn and your legs are as weak as a baby's. "Tired out, wifey. Been working hard, you know." "What have you been doing to fatigue you like this?" "Helping some schooner off at the bar." "Poor boy! What a good soul you are. Now let me help you to bed. You are in need of rest."

E. E. Johnson, agent of the N. P. Express Company, at Ainsworth, had $18,784.27 sent to him in greenbacks and money, by Ladd & Tilton, to be used by Bunnell, the bridge contractor to pay off his hands. The express agent and the money are raising. There has been a serious delinquency on the part of this man Johnson.

THE OLD MAN'S TRIUMPH.

On Wednesday two men who are in the habit of dropping into a saloon every day for a lunch and a drink, and a jolly laugh, met as usual, but one of them was looking sad and nothing his friend could say seemed to revive his spirits. After taking a drink the sad man warmed up a little, and sighed, and then he said:

"Partner, I am going to procure a divorce."

Had a beer keg exploded in their midst, the friend could not have been more astonished. "Great heavens," said he, "you don't accuse your wife of—"

"No, I don't," said the sad man. "Nothing of the kind. But I cannot be ruined, have my property destroyed recklessly by a woman with no sense. O, it is too much," and the sad man dropped his head on the beer table and wept.

"Confide in me," said the friend encouragingly, ordering more beer. "Tell me what has happened to so crush you. Some crackers and cheese with this," to the bar-tender.

"Well, I will tell you," said the ruined man, as he wiped a tear from his eye and blew the foam off the beer. "You remember that exhibition of the Harden Hand Grenade Fire Extinguisher that we attended, where a fellow threw a bottle of saleratus water at a lot of burning barrels of kerosene and tar, and put the fire out so quick we had to go and get a drink to keep warm? Well, I thought they would be a handy thing to have in the house in case of fire, and I bought a case of a dozen bottles of the grenades and sent them up to the house, I didn't kick when I came home and found the hired girl had opened one of the hand grenades and filled the vingaruet with the contents, but I went right to work and explained to the whole family that the grenades were for, and how, if a fire broke out in the house, they wanted to throw the bottles at the fire and brake them, and the gas would put out the fire. I thought they all understood it, and I put the bottles down cellar. This morning my wife got up first, and went down stairs to stir up the furnace, and pretty soon I heard a smashing down cellar, as if all the glassware in the house was being broken, and the hired girl came up and told me the kindling wood in the cellar was all afire. I jumped into one pantaloons leg and went down, and there stood the old lady fring bottles at the fire, left handed. You know how a woman throws! She could just hit a pile of kindling-wood, if she threw the bottle in the opposite direction. Well, every bottle she threw seemed to make the fire worse, and when I got there I told her to hand me a bottle she was just going to throw, and when she handed it to me it fairly took my breath away. She had gone into the wrong box, and she had been throwing champagne and brandy, and whisky, some imported liquor that I would not have had destroyed for five hundred dollars. O, it was the worst wreck you ever saw," and the man bowed his head again and wept.

"Well, did you put the fire out?" said the friend.

"Put it out! Why, bless you, as soon as I recovered from the shock that I had when she handed me the bottle of champagne, I went and got the hand grenades and fired three of them at the fire and it all went out quicker than a wink, but the loss was terrible, and the insurance company refused to pay for my liquor. I can never live with that woman again. I have a suspicion that she did it on purpose."

The friend tried to soothe the anger of his old chum, but time only can cause him to look upon his wife as anything but an enemy.

A SENSITIVE DONKEY.—An excellent story is told about a young man whose attentions to a young lady became the subject of comment. She was his companion in his daily rides, and apparently they both enjoyed the propinquity. Suddenly the rides ceased, and the young fellow was asked the reason. He replied that she had called him a jackass, and that he would not ask any girl to ride with him after that. The lady's friends were shocked, and asked for particulars. This was his explanation: "You see, we had been so much together that I gave out in topics of conversation, and when I took her out last I couldn't think of anything but the weather, and I said: 'I believe it is going to rain; I felt a drop on my ear.' She looked at me and carelessly said: 'The rain is a half mile off.' New, did not that mean I was a jackass with long ears? I have never been near her since."

During January the public debt was reduced $11,800,000.
