The Oregon Central Land Grant

Congressional action upon the forfeiture of the land grant of the Oregon Central railway on last Saturday was as follows:

The house took up for consideration the bill declaring forfeited land granted to the Oregon Central railway in 1871, for construction of a road from Portland to Astoria, a part of which has never been built.

George, of Oregon, followed in a strong speech, in which he stated that unless allowed to amend the bill so as to obliterate some of the objectionable features, he would vote against it.

He exhibited a rough map of the route of the road, showing that the company had constructed from Portland to McMinnville, and in good faith earned the land grant for that portion.

He stated that the rest of the line, ninety-two miles in length, had never been built, because river competition between Portland and Astoria would have rendered the enterprise unprofitable.

Besides forfeiting all the land grant, both earned and unearned, the bill forfeits the right of way of the constructed road through public lands of the United States, which he considered outrageously unjust.

George argued the section of the bill allowing persons who had purchased from the company to obtain title to 160 acres from the government would protect more speculators than actual settlers.

He offered five amendments, perfecting the bill in the particulars named, which were allowed by unanimous consent.

During his whole speech George was listened to with marked attention by the entire house, and though pestered throughout with questions his answers often brought out applause.

The bill was not disposed of, so the house adjourned after George's remarks. The rumors are current that the Union and Central Pacific railroads are working to gain control over the O. & C. and the Oregon Railway and Navigation company's lines.

The cessation of work on the O. & C. extension seems to corroborate that view. In reference to the control sought to be gained over the O. R. N. Co.'s line from Wallula Junction to Portland, and the use thereof by the Northern Pacific Vice President Oakes gives the following to the Pioneer "Press" of Minnesota:

"The Northern Pacific has a contract, which ante dates even the construction of the Oregon Railway and Navigation company's road, under which the Northern Pacific has access to Portland on as good terms as if the company operated its own line to the point. I doubt whether it would build a line of its own to Portland in any event.

Drinking and Position of Trust

The authorities of the Wisconsin Central Railway issued in October last an order requiring the instant dismissal of any employee who might drink even beer whether off or on duty.

There was a good deal of opposition to the order at first, as if it infringed upon private right, etc., but it has wrought so well that we are told several other large railway corporations are thinking of following the same course.

This is in the right direction. The traveling public have a right to the greatest possible protection, when on their necessary journeying, and they will be pleased to know that none who are in charge of trains have even the chance of becoming drunkards.

A man does not need to be drunk in order to work irreparable mischief. An extra glass, by giving him a certain amount to unsteadiness of hand or brain, may do all; and these railway authorities in Wisconsin do well to say to all who seek employment from them "You can't drink and work for us."

We don't ask you to give over drinking. That's your lookout, and you have a right to do as you please. But if you will drink you are not for us. We require men who have all their wits about them, and that any one who drinks never has."

Stealing a Ride in England

A man wishing to travel free from Wolverhampton, England, to Liverpool, procured two stout pieces of rope, which he fastened to the axles of a railway carriage, leaving a noose at the end of each. Into one noose he put his legs while he inserted his shoulders into the other.

In this position he hung when the train started. The train was an express, and did not stop until Crewe was reached, which is about 70 miles from Liverpool. He was rather uncomfortable when the train began to move, but when he got into full swing he had real torture, and when he reached Crewe he was nearly dead with fright.

Here he was taken into custody. To the magistrates who adjudicated on the case he explained that his sensations when swaying to and fro were something awful, and the effect of the sleepers as they rushed past him nearly robbed him of reason, and he "was afraid that every moment the rope would slip from his shoulders and hang him."

The magistrate decided that he had had enough punishment, and remarking that he was not likely to repeat the experiment, sent him about his business. This must be a good deal worse than riding on trucks, which American tramps sometimes do.

How Clara Belle Keeps Warm

I am going round this winter as warm as I look. I have solved the problem with trousers, and without making a blooming guy of myself, either. They are not apologies for pantaloons, but a good, thick pair, different from men's only in the fact that they fit snugly from the calf downward, and disappear into the tops of my gaiters.

I would defy anybody, aided only by such facilities of inspection as a chance flirt of the skirts afforded, to see that they were not ordinary black stockings. So I am kept at a good temperature, and don't rely upon my petticoats to do anything but look respectable.

They are intended for comfort only—not only in walking but also in sitting. Their tightness at the ankles and looseness at the hips shape them after the model of two spinning tops. I laugh at, yet love them. Try a pair.

Gen. Sherman has received houses and other presents worth $50,000 since he became general of the army, exclusive of the $30,000 worth of diamonds given by the khedive to Mrs. Fitch, and since divided among the general's daughters. For the past fifteen years he has been paid $17,500 a year, and he will draw this salary until his death.

Never speak of your failings, my son. Everybody who knows you knows them. Never speak of your good qualities. Nobody but yourself believes you possess them. In short, never speak of yourself at all. Of course you will appear eccentric, but you will be readily forgiven by everybody.
