Piles! Piles! Piles!
A SURE CURE FOUND
AT LAST!
NO ONE NEED SUFFER!
A sure Cure for Blind, Bleeding, Itching and Ulcerated Piles has been discovered by Dr. William, an Indian Remedy, called Dr. William's Indian Ointment. A single box has cured the worst chronic cases of 25 or 30 years standing. No one need suffer five minutes after applying this wonderful soothing medicine. Lotions instruments and electuaries do more harm than good. William's Ointment absorbs the tumors, allays the intense itching, (particularly at night after getting warm in bed,) acts as a poultice, gives instant relief, and is prepared only for Piles, itching of the private parts, and for nothing else.
Read what the Hon. J. M. Coffinberry of Cleveland says about Dr. William's Indian Pile Ointment: I have used scores of Pile Cures, and it affords me pleasure to say that I have never found anything which gave such immediate and permanent relief as Dr. William's Indian Ointment.

An Outrage on the Hen.

Thoughtful people cannot help looking with alarm upon some of the strides that science has been making of late years. It is getting so that many things that have been done by nature, are better done by art, and where the thing is going to stop, no one knows. The new scheme that is causing the most talk at present, is the artificial hatching of eggs by patent incubators, and the effect the new process will be apt to have on hens. The hen is naturally a sensitive insect, an honest, hard-working and pious appearing bird, that never does any harm. The artificial propagation of fish seemed at one time to be an outrage upon well meaning fish, and many looked for bad results, as the result of taking the responsibility of hatching away from the fish, but fish have not that finely organized nature that hens have, and they are not sensitive as to their rights, like the hen. The fish are a natural loafer and a pirate, and it is more then probable that the shiftless inhabitants of the waters were half glad that the responsibility of hatching their young was shifted to the shoulders of man, but it is different with the hen. No process of reasoning can convince a hen that it is right to put a thousand eggs into a bake oven and hatch out spring chickens at all seasons of the year, leaving the natural mother of the birds with nothing to do and a strong desire to do something, a longing, to set that nothing can drive away. To the hen that has her eggs taken to an incubator for hatching something must be given, if it is nothing more than a full of procelain door knobs, or base balls, and any person can imagine the sorrow that will come to a hen after sitting her allotted time on door knobs, with no result, and then see a brood of chickens come out of an incubator, with a suspicion as to the legitimacy of the chickens always hanging over them. Such an experience on the part of the most level headed hen is liable to bring on nervous prostration, with all its evils, and great suffering must result. The hen is naturally tender hearted, as any one knows that has seen a hen scratch for worms for another to eat, never thinking of herself at all, so it seems cruel to take from the hen the eggs she lays so unselfishly, and which are so dear to her. It is shown that the hen lays her eggs unselfishly, in the fact that she lays them more numerously when they are cheap. If the hen was a grasping monopoly, or a hard hearted, soulless corporation, she would enjoy herself in the spring and summer, when eggs are cheap, and build up her constitution by exercise and out-door air, and when winter came, and eggs got up to forty cents a dozen, go to work and lay eggs night and day, and retire with a fortune. But the hen is not that kind of an insect. The work that is given her to do she does with all her might, and no matter whether she belongs to rich or poor, she lays for all that is out when it is her time to lay, and when she is attacked by the malarial desire to set, and wishes to retire to her boudoir and recline for a few weeks upon eggs that she has brought into this world, it is cruel in man to deprive her of that needed rest and furlough from business, and cause her family to be hatched by an incubator, and raised by hand, leaving the hen to wander around in a deplorable state, her body full of intermittent fever, and farrow to all intents and purposes. To see a hen thus deprived of the sweet solace of setting, which nature intended should be her condition at certain seasons of the year, to see her to try to look upon her bereavement as all for the best, to see her try to sing when her heart is breaking at the deception and ingratitude, and grasping disposition of man, and to see the hot tears come unbidden to the eye of the hen, and roll down her in expressibly sad countenance, and drop off her bill on to a red angleworm she has scratched up from force of habit in an absentminded way, is a feature that must touch any heart not caloused entirely by association with an incubator. Too see a rooster, who knows instinctively that there is something the matter with his hen, come around and try to cheer her up and induce her to look upon the bright side of life, and to never mind the lost eggs that have gone away from the parent nest to be hatched, and to hear him tell her in his own language, that he will go and find a place where she can lay more eggs out of sight of tyrant man, and that he will protect her with his life, and to see her look up to him in that pitiful manner that no pen can describe, with tears in his eyes, and seem to say, "It is more than I can bear, and I will never lay another egg," is a scene that brings sorrow home to every person that sees it, and if these persons who manage incubators could know half the sorrow they are causing, a sorrow that reminds one of the days of slavery, when offsprings were torn from the mother's arms, to be sold far away, they would take an ax and chop up the incubators, give back the eggs to the mothers who bore them, and let nature take its course. Then they would see smiles on the faces of the hen, that are now crushed by the monstrous injustice of artificial incumbation, and every hen would be encouraged, and bustle around and do all in her power to contribute to the financial success of her owner. But the demon of speculation has attacted man, and machinery has taken the place of nature, with no thought of the aching hearts concealed beneath the feathers of the hen, no appreciation of fact that every year hens becoming demoralized from grief, and will eventually quit the business. This is all wrong.

Pneumonia in Horses.

R. Santord, M. D., writes the Oregon City "Enterprise" about pneumonia, which he says people call "staggers." We speak of blind staggers in another place. Here is what Mr. Sanford has to say about pneumonia, and it is apparently valuable to all farmers to understand:

Now this disease called staggers is nothing more nor less in the majority of cases than pneumonia, brought on from sudden change of weather, cold and exposeure. All horses are liable to its influence. It attacks indiscriminately both those in good or poor condition, stabled or running at large. The writer has made a careful examination of several that have died and the result was congestion and inflamation of the superior lobes of both lungs, with consolidation and grey hepatisation of the inferior lobes, heart in most cases solid and healthy liver and bowles in a normal condition, kidneys healthy. There is generally some weakness in the loins, resulting from disturbance. If found just before death that the least movement would bring on spasms similar to an epizootic fit in the human subject. Death generally results from exhaustion and suffocation. Now in the first, or congestive stage of the disease I would use hot fomentation using at the same time diaphoretics, and all means possible to induce perspiration when that fails, and the second or inflamatory stage begins, take blood from neck until the nostrils turn pale, and repeat the bleeding in six or eight hours if the inflammation is not arrested. Administer an aperient, afterward diaphoretics and sedatives every three or four hours. Blistering over the lungs will be very valuable.

A joke is a joke, but for a young man to poke beans and shoe buttons in a young lady's ears, is carrying the thing too far, no matter how large the lady's ears may be. A rather handsome young lady in Pittsburg called on a physician the other day, and complained of a slight dullness of hearing, which interferred with whispered conversations. A shoe button was found in one of her ears, and a couple of beans in the other. She supposed they had been poked in their by her lover, as a joke. It seems strange that the young lady is not positive as to how those beans and buttons got into her ears.

JAM PUFFS.—Cut out some puff paste with a large round tin cutter, scoop out the centre of half the rounds and fill them with jam, cover with the remaining halves; after moistening the edges of the paste with a little water, glaze with whipped yolk of egg and bake; when cooked, sprinkle the puffs with powdered sugar, and glaze in the oven or with salamander.
