

The Tree by the Well.

OREGON UNIVERSITY: CLASS 1884.

An Arab Sluek in deserts wide
Once sorrowed so for thirsting man
He led before the caravan
And digging wells he, thirsting, died.
He died of thirst! the wells remain!
Oh, dear, patient Pioneer,
And Angela, what a triumph here!
To know no well is digged in vain!
We led against the sunset gold.
We lifted hand in desert land,
Digged wells and graves a broken band.
The Arab's piteous tale of old.

We plant a tree beside this well
Of knowledge in the westmost west.
You peaks rise up to call it blessed.
They stand eternal sentinels!
Some far on day when we are dust
And all this vast vale teems with life,
Some brave souls fainting in the strife
May rest them here and speak us just:

May say we few through wilds or time
Blazed out new ways for worlds to come
And murmured not, but bravely dumb
So died; full trusting God and time.

Life's lessons bid us bide its worth
With all its fruitage bound in toil.
Trust God; and trust the generous soil
Of human hearts, as trusting earth.
I count it kinglier far to wait,
To work in faith, to wait in tears,
Aye wait and wait a thousand years
Than once to doubt, or challenge fate.

So here we set this little seed
And trust its tender boughs to Time:
To grow to touch the stars sublime;
As grows and grows some small, good deed;
Set deep where lilies ever nod,
Waile round by everlasting snows,
To grow as some great strong soul grows
When growing upward to its God.
JOAQUIN MILLER.

The Hop Crop and Prospective Market.

The hop crop of Oregon is mostly in this valley, where new hop yards were set out in 1882-3, some of which will come into full bearing this year, so as to give at least twenty-five per cent. increase to the product. Much increase of acreage took place over on the Sound and in the Yakima country, in Washington, and some yards were planted south of Snake river and in the Palouse and Spokane regions. It is estimated that the Oregon crop will amount to 5,000 bales of 200 pounds each, or a million pounds of hops, while as many more will be shipped from the Sound ports. At a rough estimate, we should have a million pounds of hops in Oregon, and fully as many in Washington. The harvest may exceed that yield, but will not fall below it, unless some disaster happens to the crop we cannot foresee. The hop market is excited by reports from the English hop growing districts, which state that a blight is on the growing hops that renders it probable that the English crop will be a failure. On that supposition prices have advanced, and nothing can be done toward buying the growing crops. Some one said lately that he didn't believe hop growers would look at fifty cents a pound for their growing crops, but that would be unreasonable, for hops can hardly go at that figure with what we know of the world's needs and supplies. We learn from a buyer that he has offered twenty cents unavailingly. No doubt hops will mount up in price, but our people have learned something by experience two years ago. It is certain the hop crop will do its share to make the times improve, and may add a million dollars to the finances of this region. We shall watch the markets carefully to get the most reliable information obtainable for the benefit of our readers. It was considered hazardous to plant out heavy hop yards 1882, as some did, but they acted wisely. The blight in the old country seems to be continuous, and sometimes is felt in New York State. The use of hops is also increasing, and the business of growing hops seems to be more a certainty than it has been for some decades back. Our country has proved to be well suited to their cultivation, and climate and soil unite to perfect their growth. Appearances justify the confidence people have in making it a leading product. It is not possible to say definitely concerning prices, further than that, hop growers will be repaid.—"Willamette Farmer."
